Is Basant Lahore's Monopoly? Lawyer Decries Cultural Discrimination in Punjab

Zain Khan Malghani

MULTAN: Punjab government's claims of reviving cultural traditions have once again come under sharp criticism after permission to celebrate Basant was restricted to selected areas of Lahore only, triggering anger across South Punjab and other parts of the province.

Legal and public circles argue that Punjab is not limited to a single city but is home to over 140 million people, all of whom have equal cultural rights. Restricting Basant to Lahore, they say, reflects discrimination rather than cultural revival.

Speaking to the media, M. Sajid Azdi Sanpal Advocate, High Court lawyer, former Vice President District Bar, Vice President High Court Bar and Chairman Progressive Group of Lawyers Multan, strongly criticised the provincial policy. He said millions of rupees were being spent on advertisements in the name of promoting culture, while in practice Basant was being confined to Lahore, depriving cities like Multan and other regions of Punjab.

“This is not equality; it is a blatant violation of human rights,” he said, adding that such policies deepen feelings of deprivation and discrimination among the people.

Wheat being issued to flour mills at controlled rate of Rs 3000 per 40 kg

Punjab Food Director General Amjad Hafeez on Thursday said that wheat was being issued to flour mills at a controlled rate of Rs 3,000 per 40 kg to ensure uninterrupted supply of flour and price stability in the province.

According to official sources here on Thursday the Punjab government was providing 100% of the province’s daily flour consumption requirement to flour mills in the form of wheat.

He said, “The supply of wheat to flour mills at subsidized rates in Punjab has led to a significant improvement in the supply chain and flour is available in ample quantities to consumers across all districts of the province.”

Amjad Hafeez further said that a record 34,000 metric tons of wheat were milled by flour mills, and 1.4 million flour bags were supplied to the market. He said, “The notified prices are Rs 905 for a 10 kg flour bag and Rs 1,810 for a 20 kg flour bag.”

The DG stated that on notified rates of the Punjab government, 20,000 metric tons of wheat were being continuously issued on a daily basis to 670 flour mills. He mentioned that wherever incidents of overcharging were reported, price control magistrates took immediate and strict action.

Amjad Hafeez said that the Food Safety and Consumer Protection Department’s crackdown against hoarders, profiteers, and rumor-mongers was continuously ongoing across the province, and all administrative and field resources were being utilized to ensure uninterrupted availability of flour.

Alongside this, the Punjab government would procure 3 million metric tons of wheat through the private sector at a rate of Rs 3,500 per 40 kg (one maund). In this regard, the deadline for submission of applications for pre-qualification by the private sector had been set as February 12, 2026.

He further said that before the arrival of the holy month of Ramadan, the flour supply chain had been further strengthened and made more effective, and keeping in view the increased demand for flour during Ramadan, all preparations to enhance milling and distribution had been fully completed.

NATO Distances Itself from Trump’s Iran Strategy

In a moment charged with urgency and geopolitical drama, President Donald Trump convened what many described as a decisive, even “divorce-like,” meeting with his closest advisers, weighing the prospect of direct intervention against Iran. Naval deployments were reportedly positioned, rhetoric sharpened, and speculation surged across capitals and newsrooms alike. Yet, almost in parallel, a starkly different message emerged from Brussels. NATO, speaking through its Secretary-General before the European Parliament, made clear that Iran lies outside the alliance’s mandate and that the internal affairs of a sovereign state are not NATO’s battlefield. In so many words, Europe refused to be drawn into another war.

This divergence marks a notable inflection point in the post-Cold War history of the transatlantic alliance. For decades, the United States and its European partners moved in near lockstep through Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya, and Syria—conflicts justified in the language of security, democracy, and humanitarian intervention. This time, however, the line was drawn. The European Union’s position, echoed in NATO’s clarification, suggested a deeper calculation: if Europe were to endorse a unilateral American strike on Iran, it would forfeit any moral and legal standing to resist similar assertions of power elsewhere, even in regions closer to home. Sovereignty, once surrendered as a principle, becomes difficult to reclaim as a shield.

Geography, too, complicates the equation. The United States, separated by oceans, may be beyond the immediate reach of Iranian ballistic capabilities, but Israel lies within a far more proximate arc.

Any regional escalation would therefore carry implications not only for Washington’s strategic interests but for the security of its closest Middle Eastern ally. This proximity amplifies the stakes, turning any potential confrontation into a regional, if not global, concern.

At home, the American political landscape adds another layer of tension. As debates rage over immigration enforcement, economic pressures, and civil liberties, large-scale demonstrations have filled streets and campuses. Critics point to what they describe as a striking contrast: a federal government deeply concerned with protests and political movements abroad, yet confronting widespread dissent within its own borders. The optics of prioritizing external regime narratives over domestic unrest have not gone unnoticed by the public or by opinion leaders across the political spectrum.

The moral dimension of the debate is equally charged. Advocates of non-intervention argue that international law, however imperfect, rests on the foundational principle of sovereignty. No state, they contend, possesses an inherent right to reshape another’s political order through force. This argument gains potency when juxtaposed with the humanitarian toll of past interventions—civilian casualties, displacement, and long-term instability that linger long after the last troops withdraw.

In this context, the comparison often drawn by critics is stark. If powerful states claim the authority to intervene in the name of justice or security, where does that authority end? Why are some leaders shielded by alliances and vetoes, while others are pursued across borders under the banner of international law? Such questions, increasingly voiced by journalists, academics, and civil society figures in both Europe and the United States, reflect a broader unease with what is perceived as a double standard in the application of global norms.

NATO’s decision to distance itself from any intervention in Iran can thus be read as more than a tactical choice. It signals a potential recalibration of Europe’s role in a world where power is no longer unipolar and where the costs of alignment are being weighed more carefully. For European capitals, the calculus includes not only security concerns but public opinion, economic ties with emerging powers, and a growing desire for strategic autonomy.

For President Trump, whose leadership style has often been described as instinctive and unpredictable, this moment presents a dilemma. The rhetoric of strength and decisive action resonates with a segment of the electorate, yet the appetite for another major conflict appears limited both at home and among traditional allies. The very alliance that once amplified American power now, in this instance, constrains it.

What happens next remains uncertain. The machinery of diplomacy and deterrence continues to grind forward, even as warships maneuver and statements harden. History offers countless examples of crises that de-escalated at the last moment—and others that spiraled despite the best intentions. The difference often lies in the willingness of leaders to listen not only to their generals and strategists, but to their citizens and partners.

In drawing its line, NATO has effectively reminded the world of a principle that has been tested, stretched, and sometimes broken over the past three decades: that the internal destiny of a nation should, in the final analysis, be determined by its own people. Whether this principle will hold in the face of mounting pressures, rivalries, and fears is an open question.

For now, the moment stands as a rare instance where the transatlantic alliance and Washington part ways on the threshold of war. It underscores a shifting global landscape, one in which power is contested, norms are debated, and the legitimacy of intervention is no longer taken for granted. The hope, voiced quietly in many capitals and loudly on many streets, is that restraint will prevail—that sovereignty will be respected, diplomacy will be given room to work, and the world will be spared another chapter of destruction written in the name of security.

The coming days and weeks will test that hope. They will reveal whether the pause in escalation is a turning point or merely an interlude. For a world already burdened by conflict, climate strain, and economic uncertainty, the stakes could hardly be higher.

Pakistan’s Unyielding Stand: Integrity and Resolve for Palestine

In an age when the mighty dictate terms through sheer force, and morality is too often reduced to a mere footnote in diplomatic cables, principles become the rarest and most precious currency. Gaza today stands as the searing indictment of this moral bankruptcy—a once-vibrant land pulverized into dust, a people dehumanized and displaced, and a global conscience anesthetized by platitudes and selective outrage. Against this grim tableau, when a nation dares to proclaim unwavering solidarity with the oppressed, it is no ordinary diplomatic posture; it is an audacious act of defiance, a blazing torch of integrity in the gathering darkness.

Pakistan’s resolute and unambiguous commitment to Palestine embodies precisely this rare moral courage.

Islamabad harbors no delusions about its place in the hierarchy of global power. Pakistan wields no veto in distant council chambers, commands no fleets to reshape maps, and cannot alone shatter the chains of injustice. Yet, precisely because of these limitations, its refusal to bend becomes all the more profound. Pakistan has chosen—deliberately, defiantly—to remain steadfastly anchored to its historic, identity-defining stance: that Palestinian liberation is not negotiable, that freedom must precede any contrived “security” arrangement, and that no force on earth will compel it to participate in the disarming or subjugation of legitimate resistance.

Field Marshal Syed Asim Munir, as Chief of Defence Forces, has fortified this edifice with iron discipline and ethical clarity. Under his stewardship, the Pakistan Armed Forces reaffirm their sacred oath: military might serves to safeguard constitutional sovereignty, national honor, and principled statecraft—not to advance foreign agendas or betray sacred causes. His steadfast commitment to democratic harmony and civil-military alignment ensures that Pakistan’s security doctrine remains indivisible from its moral compass.

On the diplomatic stage, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Senator Ishaq Dar, together with his accomplished team, has traversed a minefield of competing interests with poise, precision, and principle. In a world where diplomacy too often degenerates into a bazaar of self-interest, Pakistan’s voice remains measured, consistent, and resonant with conscience. By consulting eight brotherly Islamic nations before pivotal decisions, Islamabad honors the spirit of collective Muslim consultation over solitary bravado—striking a balance that few nations achieve. Critics, ever vigilant, will always find shadows even in the brightest light; such fault-finding often betrays motive more than merit. Healthy skepticism is the lifeblood of democracy, yet chronic cynicism toward every act of statecraft erodes the very unity it pretends to defend. History reserves its harshest verdicts for those who mistake perpetual doubt for wisdom.

Yet beyond borders, Pakistan’s consistency is earning quiet respect. In an epoch of convenient flip-flops and expedient alliances, steadfastness itself carries transcendent moral authority. Pakistan may not command the loudest microphone in global forums, but it speaks with a sincerity that pierces through the noise. On Palestine, sincerity is not peripheral—it is paramount. The heart of the matter is not armament, but occupation; not imposed “security,” but rightful freedom.

As Pakistan has rightly insisted, resistance cannot be severed from its root cause. So long as illegal occupation endures, resistance remains an inevitable and legitimate expression of human dignity. Efforts to recast the Palestinian struggle solely as a question of disarmament are calculated diversions from the primal injustice. By refusing to endorse such distortions, Pakistan aligns itself unequivocally with the arc of justice and history.

To uphold principle amid adversity is never without cost. Diplomatic isolation, economic strains, and diplomatic perils loom large. Yet nations are measured not by their ease, but by their valor; not by their accommodations, but by their refusals to compromise the soul. Pakistan’s enduring solidarity with Palestine—despite every inducement and intimidation—stands as eloquent testimony to the courage of its political visionaries, military guardians, and diplomatic stewards.

Domestically, may this resolve be embraced with the reverence it commands. Pakistan may lack the power to single-handedly remake the world, but it possesses something far rarer: the will to prevent the world from remaking its conscience. In today’s merciless global order, that defiant integrity is itself a triumph—a resounding declaration that some flames refuse to be extinguished.

And in that unquenchable spirit lies the true measure of a nation’s greatness.

Kashmiris observed black day on Indian Republic Day

India observes Republic Day on 26 January annually to mark the adoption of its constitution in 1950 as a way of projecting itself as the largest democracy in the world based on justice, liberty, equality and fraternity. This story of constitutional nationalism is reinforced by military parades, cultural pageantry, as well as diplomatic pageantry in New Delhi. However, this day means a lot of another thing to a significant to the people of Indian occupied Kashmir. It is noted as a Black Day, a symbol of being dispossessed and not being able to live up to promises and even the denial of political rights on a systematic basis. This opposition of celebration and mourning brings out a moral and political hypocrisy in the core of the Indian state-relationship with Indian occupied Jammu and Kashmir. This article takes the critical and unapologetically Kashmiri view that the Indian Republic Day is constitutional legitimacy to India and constitutional betrayal to Kashmir where the principles embodied in the Constitution have been selectively enforced, suspended or nullified.

On 5 August 2019 a turning point has been reached. India achieved a constitutional coup by abrogating unilaterally Article 370 and demoting Jammu and Kashmir to two union territories and thereby eliminating what many Kashmiris perceive as a constitutional coup. This action was taken with the harsh military lockdown, communication blackout and detention of political leaders, activists and civilians in mass. Instead of including Kashmir by the democratic consent, the Indian state proclaimed its direct rule by using extraordinary force. When Republic Day in such a circumstance is celebrated, it seems to be a statement of majoritarian authority rather than a statement of Constitutional values. To Kashmiris, 26 January is therefore not a sign of inclusion but rather one of erasure, or diminution of a politically discrete and controversial territory into an administratively dominated and agency-less territory. The official discourses of Indians tend to ignore the Kashmiri dissent as foreign-funded or anti-nationalist without factoring in the content of Kashmiri political agendas. This denial in itself serves to highlight the reason why Republic Day is celebrated as a Black Day. Shutdowns, call of protests, and black flags are symbolic resistance towards constitutional colonialism as seen. They are a collective memory of unfulfilled promises, lived experience of occupation and a continued disjuncture between the image of the democratic India and its activities in occupied Jammu and Kashmir.

As a form of criticism, it is not nihilism or anti-democracy; rather it is an anti-selective, anti-exclusionary, and anti-coercive version of constitutionalism that is being opposed on 26 January as a Black Day in Kashmir. To Kashmiris Indian Republic Day is the personification of a political order that is founded on denial and not consent, coercion and not negotiation. A constitution which purports to secure the fundamental rights and yet is allowed to suspend them indefinitely in one area becomes immoral. The Republic Day will continue being a status symbol of domination as opposed to democracy in Kashmir until Kashmiri people are acknowledged as political beings with the right to choose their future. This continued celebration of Black Day is therefore a lesson that the constitutional legitimacy cannot be achieved by blaring ceremonies or parades, but by justice, accountability and obedience to the will of the people.

Pakistan, Rwanda eye new trade horizons as Jam Kamal Khan inaugurates Rwanda Coffee festival

Naveed Ahmad Khan

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan and Rwanda took a significant step toward deepening bilateral trade and investment ties as Federal Minister for Commerce Jam Kamal Khan inaugurated the Rwanda Coffee Festival in Islamabad and addressed the gathering, underscoring Pakistan's strong resolve to expand economic cooperation with East Africa.

On the sidelines of the festival, the Federal Minister also held a detailed meeting with Rwanda's Minister of Trade and Industry Prudence Sebahizi, during which both sides agreed to establish direct supply chains, boost business-to-business linkages, and widen collaboration across trade, agriculture, manufacturing, logistics, and investment, said a release issued here.

Addressing the festival, Jam Kamal Khan welcomed the Rwandan delegation and termed the engagement a timely initiative to unlock the vast untapped trade potential between the two countries.

He noted that Pakistan and Rwanda, both agro-based economies, share strong complementarities at a time when global food security has become a strategic priority.

The Federal Minister highlighted that while Rwanda's exports to Pakistan have traditionally been dominated by tea, coffee consumption in Pakistan is rising rapidly, particularly among the younger population.

He pointed out that Pakistan imports tea worth nearly USD 3 billion annually, while coffee is fast transitioning from a niche product to a mainstream consumer item.

He said Rwanda's premium-quality coffee, competitive pricing, and geographic proximity give it a natural edge, adding that Pakistan—with a market of over 250 million people—could also serve as a future gateway for Rwandan coffee exports to Central Asia, western China, and neighboring regions.

Jam Kamal Khan further informed that Pakistan's ongoing tariff rationalization policy would gradually reduce tariff lines, making imports more competitive and supporting increased coffee consumption.

On the export side, he highlighted Pakistan's strengths in rice, textiles, leather and footwear, sports goods, surgical instruments, pharmaceuticals, home appliances, electronics, agricultural machinery, tractors, motorcycles, and low-end manufacturing, noting that Pakistan has already started exporting tractors to

The Federal Minister emphasized that Pakistan attaches great importance to its relationship with Rwanda and is keen to diversify bilateral trade on the basis of mutual benefit, shared prosperity, and long-term partnership.

He also indicated Pakistan's interest in importing Rwandan avocados, pulses, lentils, and beans, while assuring facilitation in phytosanitary certification through cooperation between relevant authorities.

Speaking on the occasion, Rwandan Minister Prudence Sebahizi described Pakistan as a major potential market for Rwanda and reaffirmed his country's commitment to diversifying exports beyond tea to include specialty coffee, spices, and other value-added products.

He said the Rwanda Coffee Festival was part of a broader strategy to introduce Rwanda's premium coffee to the Pakistani market.

The Rwandan Minister highlighted Rwanda's position as a trade and distribution hub for Africa, offering investors access to a market of over 1.4 billion people under the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA).

He noted that Pakistani investors had already begun exploring opportunities in Rwanda and were being warmly received.

He also pointed out that Pakistani rice—both basmati and non-basmati—is not only consumed in Rwanda but also re-exported to other African countries.

Both sides stressed the importance of establishing a direct

Pakistan-Rwanda supply chain to reduce reliance on transshipment through third countries.

The Rwandan side shared that discussions with Pakistan's maritime authorities were underway to cut shipping times and costs, noting that current shipment durations of up to 45 days could be significantly reduced through direct connectivity.

The two ministers also reviewed progress on the proposed Memorandum of Understanding on Trade and Economic Cooperation, which has been exchanged through diplomatic channels.

The Rwandan side indicated that only minor technical adjustments remained and expressed confidence that the MoU could be finalized shortly, providing a strong institutional framework for cooperation in trade, manufacturing, investment, tourism, and logistics.

The engagement further explored collaboration in light engineering, pharmaceuticals, cosmetics, agricultural equipment, mining and minerals, as well as technology-driven sectors such as IT, digitalization, and artificial intelligence. Both sides agreed that joint ventures, business delegations, and sustained private-sector engagement would be crucial to translating opportunities into concrete outcomes.

Concluding the event and meetings, Jam Kamal Khan expressed optimism that sustained follow-up would deliver tangible results and reiterated Pakistan's commitment to building a long-term, mutually beneficial partnership with Rwanda.

Both sides agreed to remain in close coordination and to encourage deeper business-to-business ties in the months ahead.

‘Cantonment Area Gets Business Boost: No Sealing Without Notice, Digital Payments Promoted’

Station Commander Brigadier Ali Anjum stated that no shops will be sealed in the Cantonment area in the future. Before any sealing, the concerned authority will inform through a formal notice, clearly stating the reasons for the action, and sufficient time will be given to ensure compliance.

RCCI President Usman Shaukat said that providing a business-friendly environment must be given top priority to achieve economic growth. He added that the Chamber will continue to organize such awareness sessions on digital systems on a regular basis.

Group Leader Sohail Altaf said that the decision not to seal business centers in the Cantonment area is welcome and other departments should also follow this example. He stressed that to foster a business-friendly environment, tax rates should be brought down to single digits and the cost of doing business must be reduced.

Addressing the session, Rizwan Khaleel Shamsi, Chief Manager State Bank, said that in line with the Prime Minister's directives, the State Bank has taken immediate steps to promote digital payment systems. The State Bank of Pakistan's "Raast" is a free, instant, and secure digital payment system through which funds can be sent and received using a mobile number (Raast ID) or IBAN without any additional charges. It is Pakistan's first instant payment system that connects all banks nationwide.

Senior Vice President Khalid Farooq Qazi, Executive Committee members, representatives of traders' associations including Munir

Baig Mirza, Senior Vice President of the Small Chamber Dost Ali Jan, and others were also present.

PHMA cautions India-EU FTA may hurt Pakistan's textile exports

Bureau Report

FAISALABAD: Pakistan Hosiery Manufacturers & Exporters Association (PHMA) has warned that the proposed India-European Union Free Trade Agreement (FTA) could seriously undermine Pakistan's textile and hosiery exports to the European market.

PHMA Senior Vice Chairman (North), Ahmed Afzal Awan, urged the Prime Minister to take immediate notice of the issue and adopt urgent measures to protect Pakistan's export interests in the EU.

He said that although Pakistan currently enjoys duty-free access under the GSP+ scheme, the competitive playing field would remain uneven if India secured similar tariff concessions through an FTA. Pakistan's GSP+ status, he noted, is subject to strict compliance with 27 international conventions covering human rights, labour standards, environment, and governance, which significantly increase costs for exporters.

In contrast, he added, India would not face comparable ongoing compliance obligations under an FTA.

Pakistan Cricket Team Beat Australia By 22 Runs in First T-20 Match in Lahore

Asim Tanveer

LAHORE: An all-round performance from Saim Ayub led Pakistan to a clinical 22-run win over Australia. Ayub's 74-run partnership with Salman Agha, in which Agha contributed 39 off 27, set Pakistan up for a big total in the first half of the innings. While the pair's dismissal led to Australia pulling the innings back, with Adam Zampa and Xavier Bartlett taking two wickets each, Pakistan had built up enough of a buffer to keep the run rate respectable.

Some of the more seasoned players struggled to get over poor runs of form. Fakhar Zaman and Babar Azam struggled notably to get their innings off the ground, with Babar scoring 14 off his first 15 balls and ultimately falling for 24 in 20. Zaman's battles were even more pronounced, scratching around for 16 poorly timed balls and managing 10, but a late cameo from Usman Khan propelled Pakistan to 168.

For a fresh-faced Australian side, captain Travis Head's performance was always likely to have an outsized role in the ultimate outcome. He began brightly with a first-over six, but a brief, entertaining knock ended on 23 when Ayub had him hole out to Babar, who made up for his batting woes with three excellent catches in the deep.

With Ayub having already removed Matt Short, Pakistan needed to only bear the passing storm of Matt Renshaw and Cameron Green's 40-run partnership, whose end also effectively heralded the conclusion of Australia's most muscular challenges. The rest of the innings folded fairly tamely, and by the time Salman Mirza closed out the final over, the outcome was no longer in doubt.

Saim, Salman get Pakistan flying

Shrugging off the soft first-ball dismissal of Sahibzada Farhan, Ayub and Agha made effective use of the powerplay. Ayub made his intentions plain by whipping his first ball towards midwicket for six. Each of the first three overs saw a six struck as Ayub combined crisp timing with focused aggression, with Salman playing a competent supporting hand at the other end. The 50-run stand was brought up in 32 balls as Pakistan put on 56 in the powerplay—the joint highest in T20Is for Pakistan against Australia.

Crucially, there was no deceleration as the field spread out, Agha making the point with a six off the second ball post powerplay, and 29 runs coming in the three overs after the sixth. By the time the pair were dismissed, Ayub had struck 40 in 22, while Pakistan sped up to 85 in nine overs.

Zampa drags Pakistan back As the senior statesman in an Australian attack that was particularly wet behind the ears, it fell to Zampa to rein Pakistan in. The spinner delivered with predictable consistency, deploying the full arsenal of his variations to break the pair's rhythm. Off his fourth ball, Ayub failed to get enough purchase on a muscled pull down the ground, holing out to long-on. It was a fielder Pakistan found often, with five catches taken at that position.

It fell to Zampa to remove Agha, too, when he lit up the Pakistan captain's eyes with a looping ball on the stumps, off which Agha found elevation but not distance. Taken off for a few overs, Zampa came back to snare a struggling Babar when he darted one through and trapped him in front as the batter looked to reverse-sweep. He made it four in four overs with a sensational 18th over, in which he conceded three runs and sent Usman Khan on his way. By the time his spell was done, Zampa had 4 for 24, and Pakistan's run rate had slipped to 8.27.

The run out and the collapse

Australia were well on their way in the first seven overs of the chase, speeding along to 68 with Green and Renshaw timing the ball cleanly and keeping the asking rate in check. It was Abrar Ahmed's introduction that began the turnaround, even if what started it had little to do with him. Renshaw nudged the first ball to midwicket and set off for a sharp single, but Green stayed rooted to the spot. Agha dived sharply to intercept, and it wasn't until he had made it more than halfway through that Renshaw realised the peril, by which time it was much too late.

Two balls later, Abrar had his first wicket when he skidded one through to Cooper Connolly that turned back in and knocked back his stumps. It set Australia off on an irrevocable slide as the runs dried up and Pakistan continued to puncture their way through the line-up. Six wickets fell for 44 runs with Abrar playing a similarly devastating role as his Australian wristspinning counterpart, finishing with 2 for 10 in his four.

Meanwhile, Chamuditha continued on despite losing wickets at the other end. He scored 110 from 94 balls with the help of 13

According to him, Lahore Qalandars have firmly established themselves among this elite group over the past decade.

"Across the world, there are countless T20 franchises, but only a handful

AB de Villiers extended his heartfelt congratulations to Sameen Rana, Atif Rana, and the entire Lahore Qalandars organisation for achieving extraordinary growth in the franchise's value over the past ten years. He credited their success to sound decision-making, consistent strategy, and continuity in leadership, which have collectively positioned Lahore Qalandars as one of the most valuable T20 franchises of the modern era.

Expressing his regret at being unable to join the team in Lahore on this occasion, de Villiers nevertheless conveyed his best wishes for the franchise's future. He voiced strong confidence in Lahore Qalandars' continued progress and success over the next decade, expressing optimism about their long-term trajectory.

Under the leadership of Sameen Rana and Atif Rana, Lahore Qalandars have emerged not only as a strong commercial and brand entity, but also as a benchmark in cricketing values, team culture, and consistent on-field performance.
