Pakistani Pine Nuts Shine at Nanjing Spring Festival Food Fair

As China’s Lunar Year of the Horse approaches, the 25th Nanjing (National) Spring Festival Food and Commodity Fair has commenced its 18-day run, opening its doors on January 27 to throngs of visitors. The annual fair, a landmark event in the lead-up to China’s most important festival, has drawn over 600 domestic and international companies presenting a dazzling assortment of goods.

The offerings range from traditional Chinese specialties – including pastries, candies, nuts, seafood and fresh produce – to global delicacies such as Indonesian coffee, Middle Eastern dates and a special highlight: pine nuts from Pakistan. Amid the vibrant festive ambience accentuated by Spring Festival couplets, horse-themed decorations and intricate cultural crafts, stalls featuring Pakistani pine nuts consistently attracted keen interest. Exhibitors from Pakistan highlighted the unique qualities of their products while reflecting on their continued positive engagement with the fair.

“Participating in this exhibition has become a rewarding tradition for us over several years,” shared one pine nut trader. “The bustling crowds and genuine Spring Festival spirit create an ideal platform. As nut-based snacks are essential for Chinese New Year celebrations, we are particularly encouraged by the growing appreciation for pine nuts from western Pakistan. Customers frequently commend their rich aroma, large kernels, and ease of shelling.”

These sought-after pine nuts are harvested primarily from Chilgoza pine forests in western and northern Pakistan and are celebrated for their distinctive flavor, high nutritional value and labor-intensive production process. Often called “Chilgoza” nuts, they are carefully hand-picked from high-altitude pine cones, then sun-dried and processed with meticulous attention. More than just a local delicacy, the nuts represent a major agricultural export for Pakistan and embody the country’s rich natural bounty, CEN reported.

The fair also resonated with international visitors, including Saba Malik, a Pakistani PhD student based in Nanjing. Visiting the exhibition, she expressed her pride at seeing her country’s produce warmly received. “The diversity at the fair is remarkable, and it is truly heartening to witness Pakistani pine nuts enjoying such popularity,” she noted. Malik further pointed to wider opportunities for trade collaboration, adding, “Many products displayed here, such as ribbonfish and honey, are also abundant in Pakistan. I see promising potential for mutual market growth and deeper bilateral cooperation from the fair.”

Running until Feb 13, the Nanjing Spring Festival Fair continues to serve as a dynamic bridge connecting cherished Chinese holiday traditions with high-quality products from across the globe. In this festive marketplace, Pakistani pine nuts have firmly established themselves as a seasonal favorite, symbolizing both shared culinary enjoyment and the strengthening economic and cultural ties between China and Pakistan.

The Debt Trap of Wealthy Economies and the Rising Threat of Global Economic Instability

The global economy is currently standing at a highly precarious juncture, where states long regarded as prosperous are increasingly buckling under the weight of the very financial burdens they themselves have created. It is a sobering reality that countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, and Japan once seen for decades as symbols of fiscal discipline, industrial strength, and sound policymaking are now buried beneath mountains of public debt. This debt not only threatens their own domestic economic security but has also become a serious warning signal for the entire global economic architecture. International observers, including The New York Times, largely agree that this record-level debt is no longer merely a matter of statistics; it now challenges the very foundations of global growth, investment trends, and financial stability.

Over the past two decades, developed economies have relied excessively on borrowing, a dependence rooted in global financial crises, pandemic-related expenditures, war costs, and expansive social welfare commitments. In the United States, government debt relative to national output has reached levels once confined to economic theory textbooks. In the United Kingdom, the persistent relationship between budget deficits and rising debt has raised fundamental questions about fiscal sovereignty. Meanwhile, in countries such as France and Italy, the combination of high debt and weak economic growth is generating deeper concerns about the future. Japan, already counted among the world’s most indebted nations, now faces even greater difficulty escaping this burden due to an aging population and limited economic expansion.

What makes this debt crisis particularly dangerous is that the global financial environment is no longer favorable. In the past, low interest rates allowed governments to temporarily manage budget deficits through cheap borrowing. Today, however, inflationary pressures have compelled central banks to raise interest rates significantly. As a result, interest payments on debt have themselves become a massive and separate government expenditure. In several countries, spending on interest alone now exceeds combined budgets for defense, education, or healthcare an alarming indicator of fiscal stress.

This situation is proving severely damaging to development and social welfare initiatives. When a substantial portion of state resources is consumed by debt servicing, investments in infrastructure, research, human development, and social protection are either curtailed or indefinitely postponed. The direct consequences are felt by ordinary citizens, as access to healthcare, education, and employment opportunities steadily shrinks. Economic inequality deepens, and the trust gap between the state and its people continues to widen.

Another grave dimension of rising interest rates and debt is the inflationary pressure that spreads globally. When major economies adopt monetary tightening, capital flows in international markets are disrupted. Investment begins to exit developing countries, their currencies come under pressure, and inflation becomes a worldwide challenge. The heaviest cost is borne by societies that are already economically vulnerable. Thus, the financial crises of wealthy nations evolve into fresh trials for poorer and developing regions of the world.

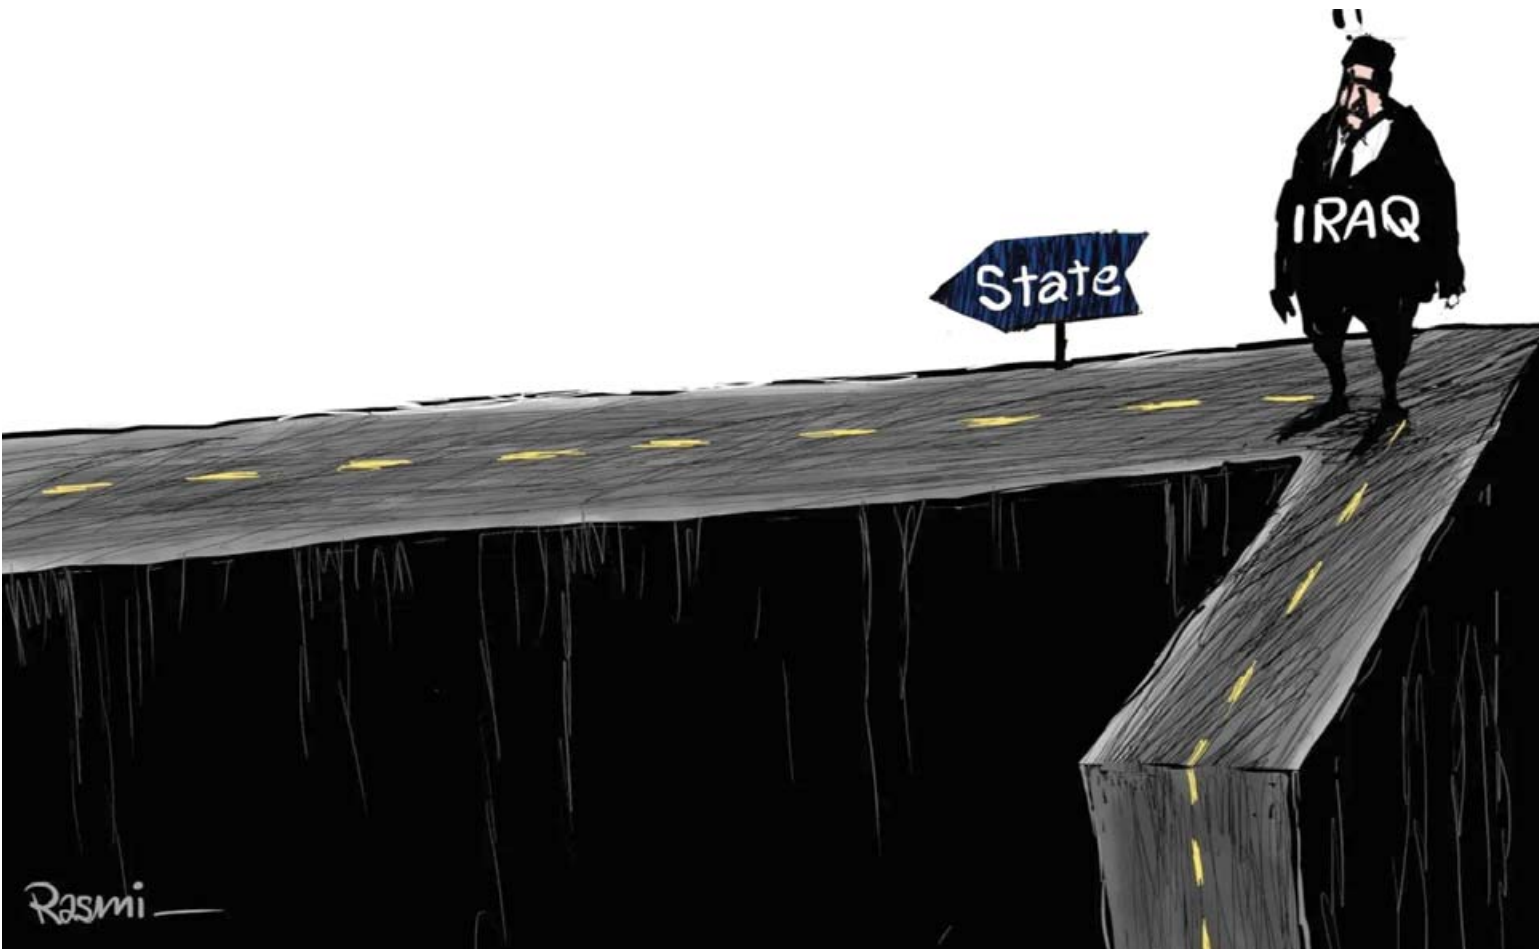

It would not be incorrect to say that the current debt crisis is the outcome of a long history of flawed policy priorities. Many developed states ignored long-term fiscal discipline in pursuit of political popularity, expanded welfare promises without sustainable revenue streams, and incurred heavy military and strategic expenditures whose economic returns were far from clear. Today, those decisions have resurfaced as a collective debt burden, one that cannot be resolved through short-term or superficial measures alone.

At the global level, resolving this crisis cannot be limited to spending cuts or tax increases. What is required is a comprehensive fiscal and economic strategy centered on sustainable growth, equitable taxation, reductions in unnecessary military spending, and greater investment in productive sectors. At the same time, international financial institutions must reassess their own policies to ensure that the burden of debt is managed in a fair and balanced manner.

Ultimately, it cannot be ignored that if the world’s largest economies fail to address their debt crises with seriousness and resolve, the consequences will not remain confined within national borders. Global trade, investment, and the pace of development will all suffer, potentially giving rise to a form of financial instability deeper and more prolonged than previous crises. In this context, wealthy nations face a critical moment of reflection: to move beyond short-term political interests and chart an economic course that guarantees stability and growth not only for their own citizens, but for the world as a whole.

Trump Peace Board: Russia and China’s roadmap

In global politics, the struggle for power, interests, and ideologies has always been ongoing, but in the twenty-first century this struggle has taken on new forms. The foreign policy of former U.S. President Donald Trump and the various “peace plans” he presented often referred to by some analysts as the “Trump Peace Board” attracted significant attention worldwide. The core idea behind this concept was that the United States would use its power, economic influence, and diplomatic pressure to resolve global conflicts in line with its own interests. However, how major global powers such as Russia and China view this strategy is a highly important question for students and analysts of international relations.

The central slogan of Donald Trump’s foreign policy was “America First.” Under this approach, he reviewed many international agreements, withdrew from some of them, and attempted to place greater financial and defense responsibilities on allied countries. During his tenure, the U.S. adopted a relatively tough and independent stance toward forums such as NATO, the Paris Climate Agreement, the Iran nuclear deal, and the World Trade Organization. In this context, various plans proposed by Trump to resolve conflicts also emerged, including the Middle East peace plan and negotiations with North Korea.

The term “Peace Board” symbolically represents Trump’s broader mindset of viewing global conflicts in a manner similar to business deals. In his view, peace is an agreement in which both parties gain something, but the primary benefit should serve America’s strategic and economic interests. In this thinking, the balance of power, sanctions, trade pressure, and diplomatic incentives play a central role.

Russia, which sees itself as a major global power and an alternative pole to the United States, has had a mixed response to Trump’s policies. On one hand, reports of relatively better personal relations between Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin emerged. On the other hand, both countries stood in opposition on issues such as NATO’s expansion, the Ukraine conflict, and economic sanctions.

From Russia’s point of view, the “Peace Board” is essentially a new form of maintaining American dominance. Russian analysts believe that the United States seeks peace agreements that prioritize its own strategic interests while placing other powers in a secondary position. American alignment with Israel in the Middle East and NATO’s presence in Europe have remained major concerns for Russia.

However, Russia also saw an opportunity in Trump’s approach. Since Trump showed less confidence in global institutions, Russia attempted to advance its interests through bilateral negotiations. Examples include talks on arms control agreements and limited cooperation with the United States on the Syrian issue.

China, as a rapidly rising global power, mostly views Trump’s policies through the lens of strategic competition. During Trump’s presidency, a trade war began between the United States and China, which significantly strained relations between the two countries. From China’s perspective, the “Peace Board” is an attempt to preserve American superiority in the global system and to limit China’s growing economic and political influence.

Chinese leadership emphasizes that global problems should be solved through multilateral cooperation rather than the pressure of a single power. This is why China promotes platforms such as the United Nations, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, and the Belt and Road Initiative, aiming to establish a balanced and shared global system.

Trump’s Middle East peace plan, especially regarding the Palestinian-Israeli issue, received cautious responses from both Russia and China. Their stance was that any sustainable peace requires the consent of all parties involved and respect for United Nations resolutions. Russia and China stressed that unilateral decisions could increase instability in the region.

Both Russia and China appear to agree that Trump’s policies sparked a new debate about the balance of global power. The United States’ distancing from global institutions created opportunities for Russia and China to expand their influence. Their growing presence in regions such as Syria, Africa, and parts of Asia is often seen as part of this broader strategy.

Trump’s trade policies had a deep impact on the global economy. The trade war with China affected not only both countries but also markets around the world. Russia used this situation to its advantage by strengthening economic cooperation with China, particularly in the energy sector.

Both Russia and China view diplomacy as a long-term game. In their opinion, Trump’s style was more focused on immediate results, with less attention to long-term stability. Therefore, they tend to see the “Peace Board” as a temporary strategy that can change with a shift in leadership.

For Russia and China, Trump’s “Peace Board” is a concept that presents both opportunities and concerns. Russia sees it, on one hand, as a symbol of American pressure, and on the other, as a means to pursue its interests through bilateral negotiations. China evaluates it in the context of global power competition and stresses the importance of multilateral cooperation.

Ultimately, the future of global peace can only be bright if major powers consider not only their own interests but also their global responsibilities. Dialogue, cooperation, and mutual respect among Russia, China, and the United States can form the foundation of a balanced and sustainable international system.

5 February Kashmir Solidarity Day -a Strong Massage of Support

Syed Faiz Naqshbandi

On 5 February, Kashmir Solidarity Day, the people and Government of Pakistan convey to entire world especially to India a clear, loud and power message of political, diplomatic, moral, and humanitarian support to the people of Indian Occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IOJK) and their just and legitimate struggle for the inalienable right to self-determination, in line with the United Nations Resolutions.

For more than seven decades, the people of IOJK have resisted Indian occupation and repression with extraordinary courage and resilience. India has responded to their peaceful demand for self-determination with systematic repressive policies, state violence, and brutal suppression. Thousands of Kashmiris have been killed with impunity, thousands upon thousands forcibly disappeared, tortured and arbitrary detained by Indian occupation forces.

Kashmiris are detained in far-off Indian prisons, denied legal safeguards, and subjected to inhuman and degrading treatment solely for demanding what the United Nations itself promised them. No freedom of religion and free expression is allowed. Mirwaiz Umar Farooq the supreme spiritual and leader of the people of IOJK is not allowed to offer Friday prayers. The excessive use of force against civilians, suppression of peaceful protests, communication blackouts, and collective punishment expose India’s attempt to crush the Kashmiri struggle through fear and coercion. The people of IOJK remind the world that the Kashmir dispute is not an internal matter of India.

It is a long-standing international dispute, recognized by numerous UN Security Council resolutions, which India continues to defy– a serious violation of UN Charter and international law.

The people of Indian Occupied Kashmir love Pakistan. History is testimony to the fact that Kashmiris have been celebrating Pakistan Independence Day on 14 August with passion, love and resolve. Even under huge deployment of Indian troops, Pakistani flags are hoisted on rooftops and high buildings, symbolizing hope and resistance. Conversely, 15 August-Indian Independence Day is observed as a Black Day, a clear rejection of Indian occupation of their homeland and a powerful message to the world that Kashmiris do not accept India’s rule and wants implementation of UN resolutions on Jammu and Kashmir in letter and spirit.

History records powerful acts of defiance—when Kashmiris aligned their standard time with Pakistan Standard Time, Indian forces resorted to checking wristwatches. Such acts prove that occupation may control territory, but it can never conquer hearts.

Pakistan stands shoulder to shoulder with the Kashmiri people, strengthening brotherhood and firmly supporting their right to self-determination, while India continues its policies of repression, disappearance, and violence. But no force can defeat the will of the Kashmiri people.

Pakistan remains a symbol of brotherhood, freedom, dignity, and the ultimate destiny for the people of Jammu and Kashmir is Pakistan.

Experts warn proposed 2025 regulations could trigger mass grid defection

 Commerce Desk

ISLAMABAD: Stakeholders and policy experts on Wednesday amid witnessing Pakistan's record-breaking rooftop solar movement facing a critical turning point warned that the proposed Prosumer Regulations 2025 risk dismantling a decade of citizen-led energy progress.

During the national consultative dialogue convened by the Pakistan Renewable Energy Coalition (PREC) and the Alliance for Climate Justice and

Clean Energy (ACJCE) on "Redefining the Prosumer-Grid Relationship: Analysis of Draft Prosumer Regulations 2025", the participants cautioned that a shift from net metering to net billing could destabilize the power sector by pushing consumers toward total grid defection.

Dr. Nafisa Shah, Member National Assembly stated, "Consumers are bearing the brunt of policy failures while simply trying to secure their basic right to electricity. The next phase of this revolution will be a battery rush, and we must safeguard those who rely on solar."

Senator Dr. Zarqa Suharwardy Taimur underlined that this regulation contradicts ARE 2019, NDC 3.0, and the rights of solar consumers. "It risks disincentivizing renewable energy adoption in a climate-affected nation," she added.

Imtiaz Baloch Director General Licensing, NEPRA- Imtiaz Baloch from NEPRA- Zeeshan Ashfaq, CEO of Renewables First, Dr. Khalid Waleed, Energy Economy Expert, SDPI, Rabia Babar Manager Data and Analytics, Renewables First and Shah Jahan Mirza, Ex-Managing Director, PPIB also speak on the occasion.

A Strategic Mask: India's Net Security Provider Claim in the Indian Ocean

As the Indian Ocean Region (IOR) has emerged as one of the most strategically contested regions of the twenty-first century, its traditional identity as a conduit for global trade and energy has undergone a profound transformation. Today, geopolitical rivalries, competing security narratives, and power projection ambitions are increasingly shaping the region's maritime order. Among these narratives, India's claim to be the Net Security Provider (NSP) in the Indian Ocean warrants closer scrutiny.

At face value, the NSP concept appears benign. It invokes ideas of regional stability, humanitarian assistance, counter-piracy efforts, and cooperative maritime security. However, beneath this reassuring language lies a deeper strategic logic. The NSP narrative functions less as a neutral contribution to collective security and more as a strategic mask – a conceptual cover that legitimizes power projection while portraying it as responsible leadership.

In international politics, states rarely pursue dominance openly. Instead, they rely on comforting narratives such as stability, accountability, and collective security to advance state-centric strategic goals. The notion of a strategic mask helps explain this phenomenon. It allows a state to expand influence while appearing benevolent, a tactic particularly effective in the maritime domain where the provision of public goods – such as disaster relief and sea lane security – can easily be framed as cooperative security.

India's NSP claim rests on the assertion that it contributes more to regional maritime secu-urity than it consumes. New Delhi presents itself as a first responder during humanitarian emergencies, a defender against non-traditional maritime threats, and a stabilizing force in the Indian Ocean. These roles are rhetorically aligned with cooperative security principles and regional responsibility. Yet, when viewed geopolitically, the NSP framework simultaneously legitimizes India's growing naval footprint across the region.

Over the past two decades, India has significantly expanded its operational reach in the IOR. This expansion includes forward naval deployments, rapid modernization of maritime capabilities, enhanced surveillance networks, and a web of logistics and access agreements. While often justified under the banner of maritime cooperation, these developments unmistakably enhance India's power projection capacity.

The drivers behind this strategy are rooted in broader strategic calculations. Intensifying competition with China, concerns over external influence in the Indian Ocean, and deepening strategic alignment with the United States and its allies have collectively shaped New Delhi's ambition to influence the regional order. The NSP narrative offers normative justification for this ambition, placing India at the center of the maritime hierarchy while framing its actions as protection rather than assertion.

Such an approach has far-reaching implications for the regional order. Smaller coastal and island states may find themselves drawn into asymmetric security arrangements where strategic dependence replaces genuine cooperation. Instead of fostering stability, the Indian Ocean risks becoming increasingly militarized, shaped by pressures for dominance, alignment, and strategic exclusion rather than inclusive maritime governance.

For Pakistan, these developments carry particular significance. The maritime routes of the Arabian Sea and surrounding waters are central to Pakistan's economic security, trade connectivity, and strategic deterrence. India's expanding naval presence near Pakistan's maritime approaches – justified through the NSP narrative – raises concerns about freedom of navigation, deterrence stability, and the broader security environment of the North Indian Ocean.

Moreover, India's self-proclaimed role raises important normative and legal questions. Under international law and existing maritime security norms, regional security is inherently a cooperative endeavor. No single state possesses the legal or moral authority to unilaterally guarantee security for an entire region. When such responsibilities are self-assigned, the risk of selective enforcement, exclusion, and escalation increases.

A sustainable maritime order in the Indian Ocean requires more than unilateral leadership claims. Concepts such as inclusive governance, shared responsibility, transparency, and respect for sovereign equality remain essential for long-term stability. A multipolar and cooperative security framework – rather than a hierarchy dominated by a single actor – offers a more credible vision for regional peace.

A closer analysis reveals that India's NSP claim functions primarily as a strategic cover, masking power accumulation under the language of stability and cooperation. Recognizing this dynamic is essential for understanding the evolving geopolitics of the Indian Ocean and for preventing security narratives from becoming instruments of hegemony.

These incentives include a one-time customs duty exemption on the import of plant, machinery, and equipment, along with a 10-year income tax holiday, alongside other fiscal and regulatory facilitation measures.

FPCCI hails PM’S historic economic package as a turning point for Pakistan’s export-led growth

Commerce Desk

ISLAMABAD: Atif Ikram Sheikh, President of the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FPCCI), stated today that the business community wholeheartedly welcomes the Prime Minister's historic economic package. He described the announcement as a pivotal turning point in the "Maarka-e-Maishat" (Economic Battle), placing Pakistan firmly on the path toward export-led growth.

Wheeling Mechanism: Mr. Sheikh noted that an active wheeling mechanism, a long-standing FPCCI demand, will provide industries access to cheaper energy, helping exporters meet global market requirements.

Monetary Policy: He urged a further reduction in the policy rate, suggesting a gradual decrease to 7% to stimulate investment and alleviate poverty.

The Blue Passport Initiative: The announcement of the Blue Passport facility for exporters was lauded as a significant step in boosting the prestige and morale of the business community.

Despite the positive outlook, Atif Ikram

Sheikh warned that the immediate recovery of Rs. 300 billion in Super Tax could “break the back” of the industry. He cautioned that this move would trigger a severe liquidity crisis

Claims of Growth, Ground Realities: Two Press Conferences, One Big Question

Zain Khan Malghani

MULTAN: In a V log by Mr. Naveed Ahmed Khan, Editor, Daily Spokesman said about Two press conferences held days apart at the same venue have exposed a striking contradiction in Pakistan's economic narrative—raising a fundamental question about where the truth really lies.

He said FPCCI President Atif Ikram Sheikh, alongside Federal Minister Ahsan Iqbal, addressed the media with an optimistic assessment of the economy. The message was emphatic: Pakistan is on the path to recovery, industrial activity is reviving, investment is flowing in, and inflation has not only eased but is nearing an end. The overall impression was one of near-arrival—so buoyant that one might fear the public would soon take to the streets to witness “rivers of milk and honey” already flowing.

This narrative, however, sits uneasily with another press conference held just a day earlier at the same place. Addressing the media then was SM Tanveer, Patron-in-Chief of the United Business Group (UBG)—the very group that currently commands a majority within the FPCCI and whose backing played a key role in Atif Ikram Sheikh's election as president.

SM Tanveer painted a starkly different picture. In unequivocal terms, he declared that Pakistan's textile industry has been devastated: looms have fallen silent, factories have shut down, and the wheels of production have ground to a halt. One remark, in particular, captured the gravity of his warning: “An industry takes three generations to build, but only one to destroy.”

The contradiction begs obvious questions. If industrial growth is indeed under way and investment is pouring in, where exactly is this investment going? Which sectors are benefiting—and in which cities or regions are its tangible effects visible?

These questions found no clear answers in the latest press conference, nor have they been convincingly addressed by any responsible forum so far.

This is not the first time such concerns have surfaced. Previously, prominent industrialist Gohar Ejaz was seen at a press conference pleading before Ishaq Dar, stating that Faisalabad—once the beating heart of Pakistan's textile sector—had turned into a graveyard.

With these statements firmly on record, one must ask: how should the claims of growth, investment and prosperity be understood?

This is not an argument for or against any individual. Nor is it an attempt to declare SM Tanveer right and Atif Ikram Sheikh wrong, or vice versa. The core issue is that, contrary to verbal assurances, there is little on the ground that can credibly be described as development.

This disconnect is not merely a personal perception; it reflects the sentiment of every informed citizen who observes and understands the realities around them.

If Atif Ikram Sheikh represents a group whose own patron-in-chief is openly declaring the collapse of the textile industry, it would have been prudent to consult internally before addressing the nation—or at the very least, to present these conflicting views with solid evidence rather than ignoring them altogether.

In the end, all one can do is hope that the optimistic claims being made do come true—proved not by rhetoric, but by results. Because nations do not run on speeches; they run on outcomes.

May God have mercy on this country and grant us the wisdom to distinguish between reality and illusion.

PTA hails the announcement of PM

Commerce Desk

KARACHI: The Chairman, Pakistan Tanners Association, Mr. Hamid A. Zahur hailed the announcement of PM for reduction of electricity charges which was dire need of export oriented Industries including Leather sector of Pakistan with other incentives announced by him particularly the interest rate from 7.5% to 4.5% in Export Refinance Scheme rate which would really be a great source of motivation with facilitation to the exporters of the country for acceleration.

PTA requests to Honourable PM for favourable consideration to reinstate the Export Facilitation Scheme at its original position which was eligible before 30.06.2024 as well as continued reduction in import duties on chemicals is needed in the upcoming budget for the year 2026-27. The Cumulative Corporate Tax Rate of around 50% is too high and this needs to be rationalized alongwith taxation on the salaried class individuals in order to boost investment and exports from Pakistan and help to retain our Human Capital to drive economic growth.

PTA extends special thanks to the Honourable Prime Minister for the announcement and looking forward for further level playing fields to this vital Industry so that our member exporters would play more pivotal role in strengthening the country's economy with the promotion of exports of this vital sector to achieve common goals.

Clean energy surge that can power industrial revival, economic sovereignty

Commerce Desk

KARACHI: At a time when Pakistan's economy is straining under the weight of crippling energy costs, capacity payments, and an unsustainable reliance on imported fuels, a powerful counter-narrative is rapidly gaining momentum: solar energy is no longer an alternative—it is an inevitability. This unmistakable message resonated forcefully at the Pakistan Solar Association's (PSA) annual dinner in Karachi, a landmark event that underlined the sector's growing confidence, unity, and strategic clarity.

Welcoming the participants, PSA Chairman Waqas Moosa delivered a data-driven yet hard-hitting address that captured both the scale of the opportunity and the urgency of action. He noted that despite Pakistan already achieving a record 40 gigawatts of solar installations, the domestic market still has the capacity to expand by an additional eight to 10 gigawatts, driven largely by rapid population growth and rising energy demand.

Echoing these sentiments, FPCCI Senior Vice-President Saquib Fayyaz

Magoon delivered a candid assessment of Pakistan's energy dilemma. Former PSA chairmen Rana Abbas and Amir Chaudhry urged members to remain united and proactive, recalling the sector's exemplary mobilisation during the foreign exchange crisis when imports were restricted. Muhammad Zakir Ali, CEO of Inverex Solar Energy, called upon the PSA to take its conventions beyond Karachi and Lahore to Balochistan and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. Afaaq Ali Khan Vice Chairman PSA, Faaz Diwan Director Diwan Internationals, Mohammad Jibran and others Representatives also spoke on this occasion.
