PM invites Austrian investors, business companies to invest in Pakistan

Spokesman Report

VIENNA: Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif on Monday underscored Pakistan's commitment to boosting bilateral economic cooperation with Austria while highlighting the country's vast potential in key sectors such as renewable energy, agriculture, mining, and human resource development.

The prime minister said that Pakistan was an agrarian country and more than 60% people lived in the rural areas, calling upon Austrian expertise to enhance value-addition in citrus and other produce for export markets.

He also invited Austrian investors to explore opportunities in mining, tourism and engineering sectors.

"Austria has world-class expertise in engineering, renewable energy, environmental technology and advanced manufacturing," he said while addressing the Pakistan-Austria Business Forum in Vienna.

He invited Austrian companies to participate in Pakistan's renewable energy projects, grid modernization and energy logging initiatives.

PM Shehbaz Sharif extended a personal invitation to Austrian business leaders to visit Pakistan, promising to showcase investment opportunities and the country's scenic treasures, from snow-capped mountains to vibrant cultural hubs.

The prime minister said both countries shared a longstanding friendship grounded in historical ties and decades of Austrian business engagement in Pakistan, particularly in areas such as cable car installations, minerals and renewable energy technology.

"Although the level of economic activity in recent years has declined for a variety of reasons, Austrian firms have made impactful contributions in Pakistan," he said.

The prime minister noted that discussions with the Austrian Federal Chancellor had been very warm, fruitful and productive, where both leaders agreed to follow up the meetings to take discussions to their logical conclusion.

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Finance and Revenue, Senator Muhammad Aurangzeb said here on Monday that financial losses of the State-Owned Enterprises (SOEs) have steadily declined over the past three years, falling by Rs.74 billion during the period as part of the government's ongoing reform and restructuring efforts.

In a televised media message, the minister while commenting on the Federal State-Owned Enterprises (SOEs) Annual Aggregate Report for FY2025, said the losses of SOEs stood at Rs. 905 billion in 2023, Rs.

SOEs losses declining gradually; go down by Rs.74 billion: Finance Minister 851 billion in 2024 and Rs.832 billion last year. "So over the last three years, the losses have declined by approximately by Rs.74 billion... approximately Rs.142 million per day (we) saved over the period," he remarked.

The minister emphasized that the fiscal picture surrounding SOEs was not one-sided adding that it was important to understand that while the government has had to support these entities financially, there has been a substantial return in the form of taxes and dividends.

Illustrating the balance between outflows and inflows, the minister said, in 2023, the government provided an outflow of 2.078 trillion rupees in support of SOEs, however, in the same year, it received inflows of 2.119 trillion rupees, primarily from taxes, dividends and markups paid. He said, it was around Rs.40 billion positive inflow.

He clarified that these losses were accumulating since decades and outlined key steps taken by the government to improve transparency and governance.

The Minister further acknowledged that while some profitable companies, such as those in the oil and gas sector, continued to remain profitable, their profits had decreased due to global factors such as falling oil prices. Despite these challenges, operational improvements have been observed in many sectors.

DFP anguished over Indian court's deferment of bail hearing of its party president

 Abdul Majeed Tahir

Srinagar: Jammu and Kashmir Democratic Freedom Party (DFP) has taken strong exception to the postponement of the bail hearing of its party president, Shabir Ahmed Shah, by an Indian court, terming it a well-thought-out policy aimed at prolonging his detention.

In a statement issued here today, the DFP spokesman advocate Arshad Iqbal said that Indian courts have a long history of using deferment, adjournment, and procedural delays to postpone final adjudication of the cases related to Kashmiri prisoners.

"This deliberate approach effectively prolongs the detention of the accused, particularly in matters involving pre-trial or preventive custody," he said, adding that rather than issuing a decision on the long-pending plea, the bench granted additional time to the NIA, which has yet to present any substantive evidence against Shah before the court.

He said that hearing was originally scheduled for the second week of the month but has now been postponed to February 25.

The party spokesman criticized the Indian judiciary, saying that its decisions appear politically influenced rather than based on justice.

He noted that Shabir Shah has faced unproven charges since 1968, and even after eight years in Delhi's Tihar Jail, no court has substantiated the allegations against him.

He asserted that Shabir Shah and other Hurriyat leaders are being punished solely for advocating peaceful resolution of the Kashmir dispute and for voicing the concerns of the oppressed Kashmiri people.

He urged the world human rights organizations to take effective notice of the matter and play their much-needed role to help secure early release of Shabir Ahmed Shah and other prisoners who despite suffering from multiple and acute ailments continue to languish in Indian jails.

Rethinking Europe's Middle East Policy: Balancing Interests and Values'

City Desk

ISLAMABAD: The Centre for Afghanistan, Middle East and Africa (CAMEA) at the Institute of Strategic Studies (ISSI) organized a public talk under its Distinguished Lecture series, titled, 'Rethinking Europe's Middle East Policy: Balancing Interests and Values.' The Distinguished Speaker at the event was Dr. Flavius Caba Maria, President of the Middle East Political and Economic Institute (MEPEI), Romania. Dr. Amina Khan, Director CAMEA and Ambassador Khalid Mahmood, Chairman, BOG, ISSI also spoke on the occasion.

Dr. Amina Khan, in her welcome remarks, highlighted three inter-linked priorities shaping EU policy: engagement with the Gulf region, the evolving dynamics of the Israel-Palestine conflict amid the ongoing war in Gaza, and diplomatic management of relations with Iran.

Dr. Flavius Caba Maria argued that the European Union's Middle East policy reflects a cautious, legally anchored, and internally fragmented approach shaped by shifting geopolitical realities. On Gaza, he noted that the EU has reinforced existing international frameworks, welcoming UN Security Council Resolution 2803 and referencing the 'Board of Peace' strictly within a UN-led structure, while reaffirming its commitment to international law and the two-state solution and voicing concern over developments in the West Bank that threaten its viability.

Ambassador Khalid Mahmood, in his remarks, noted that Europe's evolving role in the Middle East reflects a balance between its stated values, human rights, humanitarian principles, and international law—and its strategic interests in regional stability and security.

Russian Scientists Find a Way to Reduce Child Mortality From Burns

Researchers at the Tyumen Medical University have found, using drugs that regulate the immune system in the first hours after injury can improve survival rates and speed up treatment for children with burns.

The university reported that the study revealed the mechanism behind immune system deterioration in young children following burn injuries.

Burns are one of the leading causes of hospitalization among children under four to five, according to scientists at Tyumen Medical University. In about 75% of cases, children suffer thermal injuries from scalding liquids such as boiling water, tea, soup, or steam.

Burns rank eleventh among the causes of death in children aged one to nine, and they are also the fifth most common cause of non-fatal injuries in children. Each year, more than half a million children worldwide are hospitalized with burn injuries. According to UNICEF statistics, 260 children die every day from thermal injuries and their consequences," said Sergey Sakharov, head of the Department of Healthcare Mobilization Training and Disaster Medicine at the university and a practicing surgeon.

According to him, the main cause of illness and mortality following burn injuries is infectious complications, since thermal trauma significantly weakens the body's immune defenses.

At present, the mechanisms of immune protection in burn patients are still insufficiently studied, and specialists are searching for ways to improve treatment effectiveness, the researcher noted.

Specialists at Tyumen Medical University studied the activity of blood T-lymphocytes in young children with burn injuries. T-lymphocytes are key immune system cells — a type of white blood cell that matures in the thymus and is responsible for adaptive immunity. They identify and destroy virus-infected, bacterial, or tumor cells and regulate immune responses.

"We examined children under six years old — patients at the burn center of Tyumen Regional Clinical Hospital No. 1. As a result, we were able to determine the role of T-lymphocytes in the development of burn disease, the disruption of their function, and the subsequent mechanism of post-burn immunodeficiency," Sakharov said.

The scientists concluded that treatment of children with burn injuries using immune-regulating drugs (immunomodulators) should begin within the first hours after thermal trauma.

"Monitoring patients' immune status alongside therapy will help prevent secondary bacterial infection and accelerate wound healing or make skin transplantation more successful," the surgeon added.

Researchers at Tyumen Medical University plan to prepare clinical guidelines for physicians based on these findings in the near future.

Trump Defies Israel on Iran Strategy

Benjamin Netanyahu's recent rush to Washington was not routine diplomacy. It was a geopolitical stress test. Since President Donald Trump resumed office, the Israeli prime minister has maintained close coordination with Washington. Yet this visit carried an urgency that signaled concern — perhaps even anxiety. The core question hovering over the meeting was unmistakable: Would the United States once again expand confrontation with Iran under Israeli pressure, or was Washington beginning to assert strategic independence?

The regional environment is tense. The United States has reinforced its military posture across the Gulf and Eastern Mediterranean, citing deterrence and stability. Iran's nuclear enrichment levels — reportedly reaching up to 60% purity according to the International Atomic Energy Agency — remain the focal point of Western concern. Tehran insists its program is peaceful and reversible, while Israel views it as an existential threshold.

Netanyahu arrived seeking expansion of the negotiation framework. Israel has long argued that any agreement must go beyond uranium enrichment to include limits on Iran's ballistic missile program and restrictions on its regional alliances. In Israeli strategic doctrine, Iran's missile range and regional deterrence network form a unified threat architecture.

Yet post-meeting signals from Washington were restrained. President Trump indicated that nuclear talks would continue — but remain confined to the nuclear file. No immediate commitment was made to incorporate missile restrictions or regional dismantlement demands. That silence spoke volumes.

For decades, Washington's Middle East posture closely mirrored Israeli security framing. This time, the United States appeared to draw a boundary. Why now?

First, domestic opinion is shifting. The Gaza war has deeply polarized American society. Estimates from humanitarian agencies suggest total Palestinian fatalities — direct and indirect — have surpassed 80,000 since the conflict's escalation. The scale of destruction has fueled sustained protests across American universities and major cities. Younger voters increasingly question unconditional military assistance and open-ended strategic alignment.

Organizations such as the American Israel Public Affairs Committee remain influential, but the environment has changed. Campaign contributions and policy alignments are scrutinized in real time through digital media ecosystems. Lawmakers now face direct public questioning regarding foreign aid allocations and lobbying relationships.

Second, the economic calculus is sobering. A full-scale war with Iran would dwarf previous Middle Eastern interventions. The Iraq War cost the United States an estimated $2–3 trillion over two decades. Iran is geographically larger, militarily more advanced, and strategically integrated into regional networks. Disruption of the Strait of Hormuz — through which roughly 20% of global oil supply flows — could send crude prices above $150 per barrel. Inflationary shocks would ripple through American households already burdened by high interest rates and federal debt exceeding $34 trillion.

Third, the geopolitical landscape is no longer unipolar. China and Russia maintain strategic partnerships with Tehran. Europe has little appetite for another Middle Eastern war. The Global South increasingly resists Western military adventurism. Any unilateral escalation risks diplomatic isolation rather than coalition-building. In this context, "America First" takes on new meaning. Strategic restraint becomes not weakness, but prudence.

Netanyahu's urgency reflects Israel's own vulnerability calculations. From Jerusalem's perspective, Iran's missile program and regional alliances create encirclement risk. Israel's security doctrine prioritizes preemption and dominance. But Washington's calculus is broader: preserving global stability, economic balance, and strategic bandwidth across multiple theaters — including Ukraine and the Indo-Pacific.

Nuclear containment through verifiable inspection may be imperfect, but it is far less costly than war. The International Atomic Energy Agency remains central to any enforceable framework. If Iran restores comprehensive inspection access and caps enrichment levels, escalation logic weakens. Tehran frequently references a religious decree prohibiting nuclear weapons, though Western governments demand technical verification over theological assurances.

Washington increasingly recognizes that unqualified alignment with Israel carries reputational costs. In a world where emerging powers challenge U.S. moral authority, strategic overreach erodes influence.

There is also the question of sustainability. Continuous regional fragmentation — Iraq, Syria, Libya — has not produced durable stability. Military decapitation strategies have often created power vacuums rather than order. Iran, unlike those states, possesses cohesive national institutions and deep historical identity. Attempting regime destabilization would carry unpredictable consequences.

The emerging signal from Washington is not abandonment of Israel. It is recalibration. Conditional partnership rather than automatic escalation. In geopolitical terms, this is subtle but profound. For the first time in decades, the United States appears willing to define its own negotiation parameters, even when they do not fully align with Israeli maximalist positions.

If diplomacy holds, several outcomes become possible. Nuclear transparency reduces immediate escalation risk. Multilateral engagement on Gaza diffuses regional tension. Economic stabilization limits energy shocks. Strategic focus remains distributed rather than concentrated in one volatile theater.

But if negotiations collapse, pressure will return — from hawkish factions in Washington and from Israeli leadership advocating preemption. The durability of this recalibration will then face its true test. History rarely pivots on dramatic declarations. It turns on measured refusals — on lines quietly drawn.

Netanyahu's urgent visit may ultimately be remembered not for what was demanded, but for what was declined. If Washington sustains its current posture, it signals a new doctrine: partnership without submission, deterrence without recklessness, and diplomacy before dominance.

In a region long defined by escalation cycles, even strategic restraint can reshape history. The question is no longer whether America supports Israel. The question is whether America will define its Middle East policy by Israeli urgency — or by American interest. The answer to that question may determine the next decade of regional stability.

HEC and the New Innovation Landscape

The appointment of Prof. Dr. Niaz Ahmad Akhtar (Sitara-i-Imtiaz), an accomplished engineer and former Chairman of the Pakistan Engineering Council, as Chairman of the Higher Education Commission (HEC) of Pakistan marks a decisive and forward-looking moment for the country's higher education system. At a time when Pakistan faces interconnected challenges of graduate employability, weak university-industry linkages, limited industrial competitiveness, and fiscal pressures on public institutions, higher education must redefine its national purpose. Universities can no longer remain confined to the traditional role of degree-awarding bodies; they must emerge as engines of industrial innovation, economic growth, good governance, and global competitiveness.

Across the world, higher education commissions reflect national priorities and development models. In the United States, higher education is governed through a decentralized framework involving the Department of Education, regional accreditation councils, and powerful research funding agencies such as the National Science Foundation (NSF) and National Institutes of Health (NIH). This ecosystem encourages competition, innovation, and strong university-industry collaboration. The United Kingdom follows a more centralized and accountability-driven approach through the Office for Students (OfS) and UK Research and Innovation (UKRI), linking public funding with quality assurance and performance-based research outcomes. China, through its Ministry of Education (MoE), strategically aligns universities with national development goals under initiatives such as the Double First-Class Program, integrating higher education with industrial upgrading, technology transfer, and global ranking ambitions. Pakistan's HEC represents a hybrid model—drawing on global best practices while responding to local realities—focusing on quality assurance, faculty development, research support, digital connectivity, and international collaboration to transform universities into drivers of national development.

Under Dr. Atta-ur-Rahman's stewardship, HEC introduced unprecedented faculty development programs, foreign and indigenous PhD scholarships, and international travel grants. These initiatives created a critical mass of highly trained scholars and laid the foundation for a sustainable research culture. His early emphasis on information technology, digital connectivity, and modern research infrastructure proved visionary; today, Pakistan's growing presence in IT services and knowledge-based industries reflects that foresight.

During periods of acute financial uncertainty, Dr. Mukhtar Ahmad, former Chairman HEC, played a decisive stabilizing role. Through disciplined financial management reforms, improved governance mechanisms, and strategic engagement with policymakers, he secured approval for sustainable funding arrangements when HEC faced severe fiscal constraints. His leadership protected academic continuity, safeguarded research programs, and preserved institutional credibility at a critical juncture.

At the collective leadership level, Prof. Dr. Iqrar Ahmad Khan, as current Chairman of the Punjab Higher Education Commission (PHEC) and former Chairman of the Vice Chancellors' Committee, contributed significantly to policy deliberations, inter-university coordination, and strategic planning. His introduction of R&D clusters, joint research platforms, inter-university collaboration, and structured Vice Chancellors' Conferences provided a practical roadmap for university revamping. Such collaborative leadership is essential for translating national policy into institutional action across the higher education sector.

Over the past two decades, Pakistan's higher education landscape has expanded from nearly 100 to over 250 universities, increasing access while progressively raising quality benchmarks. The HEC model proved influential enough that several neighboring countries adapted similar frameworks. This experience reinforces a fundamental global lesson: advanced economies invest heavily in higher education because it fuels industrial innovation, technological advancement, and sustainable economic growth.

Today, Pakistani graduates serve with distinction in industries, research organizations, academia, and policy institutions at home and abroad. Their impact affirms a critical truth—investment in higher education is not an expense; it is a nation-building strategy. Under the leadership of Prof.

Dr. Niaz Ahmad Akhtar, HEC has a renewed opportunity to consolidate past gains and advance a new innovation landscape centered on university mentoring, governance reforms, digitalization, and global graduate branding. If pursued with consistency and political support, this agenda can position Pakistan's universities as true catalysts of industrial transformation and long-term national development.

Rathore's Leadership Propels Landmark Overseas Kashmiris Convention

After weeks and months of planning and sincere day-and-night teamwork, the Almighty blessed the young parliamentarian and Prime Minister of Azad Jammu and Kashmir, Raja Faisal Mumtaz Rathore, with a unique honor in the seventy-year history of the state when the Overseas Kashmiris Convention held in the capital, Muzaffarabad — the base camp of the Kashmir Freedom Movement — achieved remarkable success.

Although the credit primarily goes to the Kashmiri diaspora, who, out of love for their homeland, left their businesses and busy lives abroad to return to their native soil. Their purpose was to invest their hard-earned wealth in Kashmir, revive its culture, heritage, and traditional crafts, and help connect Kashmiri skills and products to the global market.

The Government of Azad Kashmir, along with the Government of Pakistan, deserves appreciation for providing resources and ensuring fool-proof security arrangements. Special thanks were expressed to the President of Pakistan Asif Ali Zardari Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif and Chief of Army Staff Asim Munir as well as national security institutions, for strengthening the vision of Quaid-e-Azam that Kashmir is the jugular vein of Pakistan.

Prime Minister Raja Faisal Mumtaz Rathore is described as a God-gifted politician who inherited his love for the people from his father, former Prime Minister Raja Mumtaz Hussain Rathore. His political upbringing was influenced by the ideology and public-friendly philosophy of Pakistan's great leaders, including Zulifqar Ali Bhutto and Benazir Bhutto.

With the guidance and support of the political leadership, he rose to the position of Prime Minister and achieved significant accomplishments in a short period through dedication and hard work. The article also states that despite conspiracies to sabotage the convention and block roads, the event remained highly successful. Leaders of the All Parties Hurriyat Conference and other delegations participated and effectively presented the background and importance of the Kashmir freedom struggle.

This convention is expected to expose Indian atrocities in occupied Kashmir and create new opportunities for Kashmiri youth at the global level. Overseas Kashmiris were offered attractive incentives to invest in sectors such as tourism, minerals, hydropower, carpet weaving, and handicrafts.

The Prime Minister, in his address, highlighted key policy points and reaffirmed his commitment to constitutional supremacy, good governance, and merit. He also acknowledged the contributions of government officials, political workers, and members of civil society who played a role in making the convention successful.

The success of this convention is expected to have far-reaching economic, political, and social impacts on Pakistan and Azad Jammu and Kashmir strengthening stability and providing hope for future generations.

The article concludes with a poetic tribute to the Prime Minister's leadership:

"I started alone on the journey toward the destination, People kept joining, and together it became a movement."

Why Our Students Struggle: The Gap Between Theory and Reality

Hira Saqib

In Pakistan, we celebrate education as a path to success but there is a big problem: our schools and colleges focus too much on memorizing facts and not enough on learning by doing. Students spend years studying textbooks, passing exams, and scoring high marks, yet when they step into the real world, many feel unprepared and unsure.

Our education system rarely encourages hands-on experience. Labs, workshops, internships, or real-life projects are limited, often poorly organized, or treated as a formality. This means students graduate with certificates but without the practical skills, confidence, or problem-solving ability that workplaces and businesses actually need.

The impact is clear. Employers often find fresh graduates lacking essential skills. Innovation, entrepreneurship, and scientific research, areas where practical learning is key, remain weak. Students miss the chance to explore, experiment, and make mistakes safely, which is how real learning happens.

Countries that succeed in education balance theory with practice. Students there are exposed to real projects, work experience, and creative problem-solving from early on. Pakistan can do the same, but it will take investment, teacher training, and a willingness to change traditional methods.

Education should not just be about memorizing chapters; it should prepare students to think, do, and succeed in life. Bridging this gap between theory and practice is not just an option, it is a necessity if we want our youth to thrive in the real world.

Rising Use of AI Taxi Services Overseas Dangerous for Pakistani Drivers, Says APP Provincial Convener

Commerce Desk

KARACHI: Syed Aman Shah, Provincial Convener Balochistan of Awaam Pakistan Party, has expressed deep concern over the rapid expansion of artificial intelligence (AI)-powered autonomous taxi services in Gulf countries and other developed nations. He stated that this swift technological transformation could pose serious threats to the livelihoods of thousands of Pakistani drivers working abroad, with consequences not only for their families but also for Pakistan's national economy.

He noted that advanced autonomous transport systems are being introduced in Gulf states and other developed countries, significantly reducing the demand for human drivers in the traditional transportation sector. A large number of Pakistani drivers are employed in these countries and send substantial foreign remittances back home every year. These remittances serve as the backbone of Pakistan's economy. Any disruption to their employment could therefore have serious negative economic repercussions.

NHA operates with a 43 billion Pkr surplus, defying "Loss-Making" Labels

Commerce Desk

ISLAMABAD: The recent reports labeling the National Highway Authority (NHA) as a loss-making State-Owned Enterprise (SOE) are rooted in a fundamental misunderstanding of accounting entries versus actual operational health. While news outlets cite a staggering deficit, a closer look at the audited financial statements indicates that the NHA is not experiencing actual financial losses. For the F.Y. 2024-25, the Authority reported a robust Net Operating Income of 43.612 billion PKR, calculated from 122.021 billion PKR in revenue against 78.409 billion PKR in operating expenditures. The reported "accounting deficit" of 288.541 billion PKR arises almost entirely from non-cash entries—specifically 133.771 billion PKR in depreciation and 193.488 billion

PKR in finance costs—which do not involve any direct cash outflows.

To ensure long-term sustainability, the NHA is undergoing a transformation aimed at operational efficiency and debt restructuring. Under the leadership of Federal Minister for Communications Abdul Aleem Khan, the recent milestones include a 63% growth in operating income (rising from 66.8 billion to 108.27 billion PKR) and a 31% reduction in maintenance-related expenditures. The Authority has also revolutionized revenue collection, with 81% of tolling now conducted via M-Tag as of January 2025. Through the ADB-funded SOE Transformation Programme, the NHA is currently rationalizing its debt by classifying projects into categories based on their commercial viability. These measures reinforce the fact that the NHA's operations remain cash-positive and are a testament to its financial resilience.

Pakistan slams Israeli settlement expansion in West Bank

City Desk

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan on Monday strongly condemned the latest attempt by the Israeli occupying power to convert areas of the Occupied West Bank into so-called state property, and to expand illegal settlement activities.

In a statement, the Foreign Office said that such steps are in clear violation of international law as well as relevant United Nations Security Council and General Assembly resolutions, and must be rejected by the international community.

The occupying power's continued disregard for international law and its provocative actions undermine the prospects for a just, comprehensive, and lasting peace in the region.

Pakistan called on the international community to take concrete measures to end Israeli impunity and ensure respect for international law, the foreign office added.

Pakistan reaffirmed full support for the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and for the establishment of an independent, viable, and contiguous State of Palestine, based on pre-1967 borders, with Al Quds Al Sharif as its capital.

Supreme Court sets 45-day target to clear death row, life term cases

City Desk

ISLAMABAD: The Supreme Court of Pakistan has set a 45-day target to clear all pending death sentence and life imprisonment cases, as part of efforts to fast-track criminal justice reforms.

According to an official statement, the initiative is being implemented under the leadership of the Chief Justice Yahya Afridi, with a focus on reducing long-pending criminal appeals.

The court said that since October 2024, the total number of pending criminal cases has declined from 19,549 to 12,705, reflecting a significant improvement in case disposal.

Between February 9 and 14, 2026, the Supreme Court disposed of 354 cases related to death sentences and life imprisonment. During the same period, 131 new cases were filed.

On a weekly basis, the disposal rate was nearly 270 per cent higher than the number of newly instituted cases, indicating accelerated judicial processing.

The statement said it has been decided that all death penalty cases pending up to January 2026 will be taken up and decided on a priority basis.

The Chief Justice has also issued directives to streamline and expedite jail petitions related to undertrial prisoners, aiming to improve access to justice and reduce prolonged detention.

Officials said the measures are part of broader institutional reforms to ensure timely adjudication and strengthen public confidence in the judicial system.
