PM arrives in US for inaugural Board of Peace session

Spokesman Report

WASHINGTON: Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif has arrived in Washington to attend the inaugural session of the Gaza Board of Peace, an initiative launched under the leadership of US President Donald Trump.

The prime minister is scheduled to participate in a session of the board on February 19, which is said to focus on the rehabilitation of the war-devastated Gaza and other related matters.

The initiative, formed by President Trump, has garnered support from several key Muslim countries, including Pakistan, as well as a number of non-Muslim states.

The sources indicated that Muslim countries are expected to contribute up to $5 billion in funding for the proposed initiative.

The summit will focus on three key objectives: strengthening and consolidating the ceasefire in Gaza, mobilising financial commitments for the BoP and shaping the structure of a proposed global forum envisioned by President Trump as a more effective mechanism for conflict resolution than existing international platforms.

The group is scheduled to meet in Washington on Thursday for the first time since it was established in January, to discuss reconstruction plans for Gaza.

Participants are also expected to deliberate on the formation of an International Stabilisation Force (ISF) for Gaza to ensure security.

The summit is being viewed as a significant diplomatic initiative, bringing together world leaders to discuss coordinated efforts for peacebuilding and long-term regional stability.

However, the board's proceedings, agenda, and expected practical outcomes are being handled with strict confidentiality, and no clear or official position has been made public.

Questions are also being raised in various quarters regarding the representation of Palestinians in the proposed forum, the scope of its mandate, and whether the board would continue to function after the conclusion of President Trump's term in office. No official clarification has been issued so far.

Rabies Threat Looms Over Rural Thatta, Awareness Session Warns

Kamran Khamiso Khawaja

THATTA: Dr. Sajid Shaikh, Medical Superintendent of RHC Var, district Thatta, sounded a grim warning about the dangers of rabies at an awareness session at Government Middle School Peer Patho. Addressing students during the morning assembly, he emphasized the urgent need to take emergency measures against the fatal infection transmitted through the bite of a rabid animal, highlighting that the saliva of infected animals contains the rabies virus.

Dr. Shaikh lamented that despite rabies being a fatal infection, people in remote areas and villages often underestimate its severity. "In villages, people resort to home remedies such as rubbing turmeric on the bite-wound or covering it with betel-leaf," he said, adding that such practices only worsen the situation, ultimately leading to the victim's death.

He explained that the final symptom of rabies is hydrophobia, and stressed that immediate action is crucial. "Instead of relying on outdated tactics, it is necessary to immediately wash the wound with running water and soap for at least 15 minutes and approach the nearest Government health facility to get the victim vaccinated against rabies," he advised.

Dr. Shaikh proposed awareness sessions in other schools and villages in Thatta, where literacy rates are low, to educate people about rabies prevention and healthy habits. He urged students to maintain healthy habits to avoid other communicable diseases, get their pets vaccinated, and control stray dogs.

A Humanitarian Initiative by Kulsoom Bai Valika Social Security Hospital

In the field of public health, some initiatives go beyond mere administrative decisions; they become shining examples of social awareness, state responsibility, and human compassion. Recently, Kulsoom Bai Valika Social Security Hospital has launched a formal program to deliver medications to children affected by AIDS at their homes a step that extends beyond traditional medical services and gives practical shape to the concept of a welfare-oriented state. This initiative was implemented under the guidance of Consultant General Surgeon Dr. Ghyas-uddin and the Medical Superintendent, with the primary goal of ensuring continuous and timely treatment for children who face economic, social, or geographic barriers to regular hospital visits.

In a developing country like Pakistan, AIDS is not merely a medical issue but a complex crisis intertwined with social stigma, lack of awareness, and economic vulnerabilities. Children, in particular, who are unaware of the causes and consequences of their condition, suffer doubly: physically due to weakness and the challenges of long-term treatment, and socially due to harsh societal attitudes. Any interruption in treatment can lead to serious consequences. Medical experts emphasize that consistent and timely use of antiretroviral therapy is crucial for patients with HIV/AIDS; disruptions in medication can increase the virus's severity and may lead to drug resistance.

Within this context, the home delivery of medications is not just a convenience it represents a revolutionary step in treatment strategy. Under this program, registered children's lists are prepared, and medical staff along with dedicated teams deliver medications to their homes. This ensures continuity of treatment while reducing the burden of travel costs and time for parents. The initiative acknowledges that access to healthcare should not be limited to hospital walls but must reach patients at their doorstep.

Furthermore, the involvement of renowned pediatrician Dr. Fatima Mir from Aga Khan University Hospital in providing treatment expertise highlights the program's scientific and technical rigor. Delivering treatment based on modern medical research and global guidelines ensures that this initiative is not a temporary arrangement but part of a standardized and sustainable healthcare system. Collaboration between public and semi-public institutions and expert professionals amplifies positive outcomes, not just for patients but for the health system as a whole.

An important aspect of the program is its emphasis on interdepartmental cooperation in healthcare. Efforts by Commissioner CEC and the Medical Advisor demonstrate that when administrative insight and medical expertise are combined, significant results can be achieved even with limited resources. Initiatives like these bridge the gap often seen between policy formulation and practical implementation, translating decisions from paper into tangible improvements in public life.

It is also important to note that care for children with AIDS should not be limited to medication alone. Nutritional guidance, psychological support, and social acceptance are essential components of treatment. If home delivery of medication is integrated with community awareness programs and parental counseling, its impact can multiply, spreading accurate information about the disease and gradually breaking down social stigma.

From a broader public health perspective, this initiative aligns with the global concept of community-based health care, which emphasizes adapting the health system to the patient's needs rather than forcing the patient to conform to the system. If seriously adopted in Pakistan, this model could significantly improve treatment for not only HIV/AIDS but also tuberculosis, hepatitis, and other chronic illnesses. Kulsoom Bai Valika Social Security Hospital's program could serve as a pilot model, potentially expanding to other districts and provinces.

Socially, the program reinforces the idea of state responsibility in providing special attention to vulnerable and underprivileged populations. Children with AIDS often belong to families already struggling economically, and repeated hospital visits add to their burden. Delivering medications to their homes effectively conveys the state's message that they are not alone.

Transparency and monitoring are also crucial. Timely delivery of medications, patient records, treatment progress, and reporting of side effects are key to the program's success. A digital system can further minimize corruption risks while providing reliable data for policy-making. In this regard, under the guidance of Provincial Minister for Labor, Mr. Saeed Ghani, the Sindh Employees Social Security (SESSI) system is being rapidly digitalized, particularly through the HIMS system, to provide optimal medical services to workers and their dependents.

Medical experts confirm the importance of this initiative. In diseases like AIDS, interruptions in treatment can worsen viral activity and reduce drug efficacy. Thus, home delivery acts as a protective shield, helping prevent potential complications. This approach aligns with global principles emphasizing adherence to the regular and consistent intake of medications for effective HIV treatment.

Ultimately, real reforms in healthcare are those that directly improve the lives of the most vulnerable. Kulsoom Bai Valika Social Security Hospital's initiative is not merely an administrative decision but a practical expression of respect for human dignity. If implemented with continuity, transparency, and scale, it can significantly improve the health of affected children while promoting empathy, responsibility, and collaborative action in society. This initiative may also serve as a model for other institutions, gradually shaping Pakistan's public health landscape to be more equitable, effective, and humane.

India's Suspension of the Indus Waters Treaty Threatens Millions and Violates Int'l Law

In April 2025, following the tragic Pahalgam attack, India's Cabinet Committee on Security took a step that threatens to unravel one of the most resilient achievements of international cooperation in South Asia: the Indus Waters Treaty (IWT). By holding the 65-year-old agreement in "abeyance" and vowing to divert waters to Rajasthan, New Delhi has not only breached its legal obligations to Pakistan but has weaponized the most fundamental resource of life itself—water—putting the human rights of 240 million people at grave risk.

The IWT has survived wars, nuclear tests, and decades of hostility precisely because both nations recognized that water flows must transcend political enmity. The treaty allocates the western rivers—Indus, Jhelum, and Chenab—to Pakistan, irrigating 18 million hectares of farmland that constitute 80% of Pakistan's arable land and generate nearly a quarter of its GDP. For a nation already ranked among the ten most vulnerable to climate change, with limited water storage capacity, the unimpeded flow of these rivers is not a diplomatic luxury; it is the difference between food security and famine, between livelihood and destitution.

The legal justifications offered by India—population growth, energy needs, and security concerns—fail to meet the stringent criteria for treaty suspension under customary international law, reflected in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (VCLT). The doctrine of rebus sic stantibus (fundamental change of circumstances) requires changes that imperil a state's existence or render obligations "essentially different" from those originally undertaken. Mere demographic shifts or clean energy ambitions do not meet this threshold. Similarly, the claim of "material breach" by Pakistan falters; disputes over hydropower projects were already subject to the treaty's sophisticated dispute resolution mechanisms, which India has increasingly circumvented rather than utilized.

Even if one accepts India's security concerns—a proposition requiring credible evidence linking the Pahalgam attack to Pakistani state actors that New Delhi has not publicly disclosed—the suspension of water flows cannot qualify as a lawful countermeasure. Under the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, countermeasures must be proportionate, temporary, and reversible, and must not affect obligations for the protection of fundamental human rights. Deliberately disrupting water supplies to a nation of 240 million people, threatening their rights to food, water, health, and development, is neither proportionate nor reversible. It is collective punishment masquerading as statecraft.

The human rights implications are catastrophic and immediate. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has affirmed that states must refrain from actions that interfere with the right to water in other countries, emphasizing that "water should never be used as an instrument of political and economic pressure." Yet India's Home Minister has declared India will "never" restore the treaty, proposing instead to divert western river waters to Rajasthan—a move that would permanently sever Pakistan's agricultural lifeline. Such actions violate not only treaty obligations but erga omnes duties to prevent significant transboundary environmental harm, recently affirmed by the International Court of Justice as foundational to international law.

Beyond the immediate humanitarian crisis lies the unresolved wound of Jammu and Kashmir, perpetuated by the persistent non-implementation of United Nations Security Council resolutions mandating a plebiscite to determine the region's future. The IWT's suspension cannot be divorced from this dispute that has poisoned relations between these nuclear-armed neighbours for decades, demands urgent resolution of the Kashmir dispute accordingly. As the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy recognizes, protracted unresolved conflicts create conditions conducive to terrorism. By escalating water disputes rather than addressing the root causes of regional instability, India risks transforming a manageable technical disagreement into an existential conflict, potentially triggering Pakistan's declared characterization of water diversion as an "Act of War."

The path forward requires immediate de-escalation and legal compliance. India must restore the IWT without conditions, participate in good faith in the PCA proceedings it has boycotted, and abandon plans to divert transboundary waters. The international community must recognize that in an era of climate crisis, water cannot become a tool of coercion. The right to water is universal, non-negotiable, and non-derogable.

Sixty-six years ago, leaders scarred by partition chose cooperation over conflict. Today, with the climate crisis deepening and regional tensions simmering, that wisdom is needed more than ever. To sacrifice the Indus Waters Treaty on the altar of political retaliation is to endanger not just Pakistan's future, but the very possibility of peaceful coexistence in South Asia. Water must flow; so, must diplomacy.

Nigehban Ramzan Package: A New Benchmark of Public Relief

Analysis

Maqbool Malick

The holy month of Ramadan brings with it the message of mercy, blessings, compassion, and social solidarity. It is a sacred period in which people of means are encouraged to care for the underprivileged and promote the values of justice, generosity, and mutual support in society. However, rising inflation, unemployment, and the increasing cost of essential commodities have made it extremely difficult for low-income families to meet their Ramadan expenses. In such circumstances, welfare initiatives undertaken by the government not only help address social challenges but also strengthen the bond of trust between the state and its citizens.

Under the leadership of Chief Minister Punjab, Ms. Maryam Nawaz Sharif, the launch of the Rs. 40 billion "Nigehban Ramzan Package" is a highly commendable step towards public welfare. The primary objective of this package is to provide direct financial support to deserving and low-income families across the province and assist them in meeting their essential food requirements during the holy month of Ramadan. Through this initiative, the Government of Punjab has adopted a comprehensive strategy to protect vulnerable segments of society from the harsh effects of inflation.

The government's efforts to ensure effective monitoring of these Sahulat Bazaars and to improve the supply chain are equally praiseworthy, as this initiative is not merely an announcement but is being implemented practically on the ground.

In addition, under the "Nigehban Dastarkhwan" initiative, arrangements will be made daily for iftar meals for thousands of individuals. This step truly reflects the spirit of Ramadan, as providing iftar is not only an act of compassion but also promotes the values of brotherhood, unity, and goodwill within society. For those individuals who are unable to afford proper iftar arrangements due to poverty, unemployment, or other hardships, the Nigehban Dastarkhwan will serve as a source of hope and support.

It is also important to note that welfare initiatives like the Nigehban Ramzan Package provide not only immediate relief but also contribute towards long-term social stability. When the state takes responsibility for the basic needs of its citizens, it creates a sense of security and satisfaction among the people. The decision to distribute financial assistance through the Nigehban Card is also a positive step towards transparency, as it increases the likelihood that the aid will reach the truly deserving families.

Public circles have widely welcomed this package, particularly the significant increase in the ration card assistance amount, which is being viewed as a major breakthrough in public relief measures. If implemented with complete transparency, timely distribution, and effective monitoring, this initiative can become a source of genuine happiness for millions of families during the holy month of Ramadan.

In conclusion, it can rightly be said that under the leadership of Chief Minister Punjab Maryam Nawaz Sharif, the Nigehban Ramzan Package is an excellent example of public service and the practical realization of the concept of a welfare state. The government's efforts during the blessed month of Ramadan are truly appreciable. It is hoped that this package will reach deserving individuals in a timely manner and provide meaningful relief, ensuring that the blessings of Ramadan extend to every household.

Strengthening the Peace Agenda

Uzbekistan Aims to Advance Constructive Initiatives within the Peace Council

Spokesman Report

ISLAMABAD: On 17-19 February, the President of Uzbekistan, Shavkat Mirziyoyev, will pay a visit to the United States and take part in the inaugural meeting of the Peace Council, a new international body established as a multilateral platform to promote dialogue and the peaceful resolution of pressing global and regional conflicts. The Peace Council was founded in January 2026 at the World Economic Forum in Davos, where the founding charter was formally signed in a ceremony attended by heads of state and government, as well as representatives of several founding countries. Launched earlier this year, the initiative has garnered the support of a number of states, including Uzbekistan, which joined as a founding member, thereby reaffirming its commitment to the principles of peaceful diplomacy, multilateral engagement, and shared responsibility for maintaining international stability. The establishment of the Peace Council represents a logical continuation of the international community's efforts to develop effective mechanisms for conflict prevention and to seek political and diplomatic solutions to the most acute crises of our time, particularly in the Middle East. Uzbekistan's participation in the creation of this structure reflects Tashkent's consistent foreign policy course aimed at promoting dialogue, respect for international law, and the rejection of force-based scenarios. The country's position on the Palestinian issue – grounded in support for a just and sustainable peace settlement in accordance with United Nations resolutions – has gained additional international resonance within the framework of this initiative. The upcoming participation of the Uzbek head of state in the first meeting of the Peace Council also aligns with the recent intensification of Uzbek-American political dialogue. Over the past six months, high-level contacts between Tashkent and Washington have significantly increased, signaling a qualitatively new stage in bilateral relations.

In September of last year, the President of Uzbekistan visited New York to attend a regular session of the United Nations General Assembly, where he held meetings with world leaders and heads of international organizations and discussed key issues on the global and regional agenda. Further momentum was generated in early November 2025 during the Uzbek President's working visit to the United States, which included talks with the U. S. President, as well as meetings with representatives of the American establishment, Congress, and business circles. Particular attention during the visit was devoted to strategic partnership, economic cooperation, investment engagement, and regional security, including the "C5+1" format, viewed by both sides as an effective mechanism for coordinating efforts in Central Asia. Contacts between Tashkent and Washington have been maintained across various channels, including telephone conversations and interagency cooperation. An additional indication of growing mutual trust has been the expansion of economic dialogue and the establishment of new business cooperation platforms, reflecting a shared interest in deepening practical engagement. In the United States, Uzbekistan is increasingly perceived as a reliable, predictable, and responsible partner pursuing a balanced and pragmatic foreign policy. Uzbekistan's participation in the Peace Council is thus seen as further evidence of the country's growing international standing and recognition of its constructive role in global affairs. For Washington, it also confirms that Tashkent is an important partner in advancing initiatives aimed at strengthening peace, security, and sustainable development across Eurasia and beyond.

Amid the intensification of political dialogue, Uzbek-American cooperation continues to expand across key areas. These include collaboration in regional security, support for economic reforms in Uzbekistan, the development of trade and investment, and the deepening of humanitarian and educational ties. Joint projects in energy, digitalization, infrastructure, and human capital development are laying a solid foundation for a long-term partnership. In sum, the forthcoming participation of the President of Uzbekistan in the inaugural meeting of the Peace Council not only underscores the country's active role in shaping a new architecture of international dialogue, but also complements the positive trajectory of Uzbek-American relations. The visit to the United States will undoubtedly contribute to elevating interaction between Tashkent and Washington to a stable strategic level, serving the interests of both sides and the broader goal of strengthening peace and stability in the region and worldwide.

FrieslandCampina Engro Pakistan Ltd Announces Financial Results for FY, 2025

Commerce Desk

ISLAMABAD: FrieslandCampina Engro Pakistan Limited (FCEPL) announced its financial results for the year ended December 31, 2025.

The Company pursued disciplined cost management and efficiency initiatives across the value chain. This included optimization of procurement, manufacturing, logistics and overheads, while maintaining quality, safety, and service standards. The combined impact of improved commercial execution and cost optimization resulted in an expansion in gross margin of 70 basis points and growth in operating profit of 16% vs 2024.

The uneven playing field for packaged UHT milk created by the implementation of the sales tax in 2024 remains a big challenge for the dairy sector. Despite these external challenges, the Company maintained a strong focus on its commercial agenda by continuing to invest behind its brands and delivering customer-centric offerings. These actions led to an increase in market share and improvement in volume mix.

The consumption of loose milk, remains outside tax net, the documented economy, and food safety frameworks. This taxation is misaligned with the government's stated objectives of improving access to safe and nutritious food, strengthening documented supply chains, and supporting sustainable livelihoods for dairy farmers. Furthermore, the prevailing tax regime eliminates the ability of organized dairy companies to invest in category development, dairy development programs and long-term initiatives aimed at improving farmer livelihoods and productivity across the value chain.

ICC Men's T-20 Cricket World Cup 2026

Sahabzada Farhan's brilliant not out century and Tariq Usman excellent bowling

Asim Tanveer

COLOMBO: Pakistan became the final team to qualify for the Super Eight of the T'Twenty 20 World Cup after Sahibzada Farhan's maiden international century powered them to a thumping 102-run victory over Namibia in Colombo on Wednesday.

Farhan remained unbeaten on exactly 100 off 58 balls, reaching his landmark in the final over as Pakistan posted 199 in their must-win Group A encounter at the Sinhalese Sports Club Ground.

Despite a slow start, the opener's explosive knock featured 11 boundaries and four sixes, with skipper Salman

Agha contributing a useful 38 and Shadab Khan adding an unbeaten 36 that included two sixes in the final over of the innings.

Early on the wicket wasn't that easy to bat on, I told (opener) Saim (Ayub) we'll take some time (to settle in) and I was confident that with time we could set a target," said Farhan, who was named the player of the match.

The partnership with Shadab was important. The idea was to build a partnership and once the partnership gets going, I would take charge and Shadab can hit as well.

Winless Namibia Finish Bottom Of Group Namibia's chase never gained momentum despite a promising start from opener Louren Steenkamp, who raced to 23 before the African side began losing wickets at regular intervals.

Shadab (3-19) proved instrumental with the ball as well, dismissing skipper Gerhard Erasmus before having Alexander Busing-Volschenk stumped for 20 when the middle-order batter charged down the pitch as the required run rate mounted.

Spinner Usman Tariq cleaned up the tail and finished with career-best figures of 4-16 as Namibia were dismissed for 97, ending their World Cup campaign without a win to finish bottom of the group.

Pakistan skipper Salman Agha was beaming when he described the win as a "complete performance".

"We started really well and in the middle, we put partnerships on and then finished well," he said.

"Sahibzada has been outstanding, the way he's been batting for us for the last six months. He scored a hundred today and I'm very happy for him.

"When it comes to bowling, we were lethal and we were ruthless. We bowled in the right areas."

All teams in the Super Eight have also secured automatic qualification for the next edition of the tournament in Australia and New Zealand in 2028.

Kaspersky Uncovers Keenadu Malware Hidden in Brand-New Android Devices

Commerce Desk

ISLAMABAD: Kaspersky has detected a new malware for Android devices that it dubbed Keenadu. This malware is distributed in multiple forms – it can be reinstalled directly into devices' firmware, embedded within system apps, or even downloaded from official app stores such as Google Play. Currently Keenadu is used for ad fraud, with attackers using infected devices as bots to deliver link clicks on ads, but it can also be used for malicious purposes, with some variants even allowing full control of the victim's device.

As of February 2026, Kaspersky mobile security solutions detected over 13,000 devices infected with Keenadu..

Similar to the Triada backdoor that Kaspersky detected in 2025, some versions of Keenadu are integrated into the firmware of several models of Android tablets at one of the supply chain stages. In this variant, Keenadu is a fully functional backdoor that provides the attackers with unlimited control over the victim's device. It can infect every app installed on the device, install any apps from APK files and give them any available permissions. As a result, all information on the device, including media, messages, banking credentials, location, etc. can be compromised. The malware even monitors search queries that the user inputs into the Chrome browser in incognito mode.

When integrated into the firmware, the malware behaves differently depending on several factors. It will not activate if the language set on the device is one of Chinese dialects, and the time is set to one of Chinese time zones. It will also not launch if the device doesn't have Google Play Store and Google Play Services installed.
