Pakistan summons Afghan envoy over Bajaur terror attack

City Desk

ISLAMABAD: The Foreign Office summoned the Afghan Deputy Head of Mission on Wednesday and delivered a strong demarche to the Afghan Taliban regime on the terrorist attack in Bajaur on February 16, 2026, in which 11 Pakistani soldiers were martyred.

"Pakistan condemned in the strongest possible terms the vehicle-borne suicide terrorist attack followed by a fire raid on Pakistan military and law enforcement agencies' post in Bajaur carried out by Fitna Al Khwarij / TTP," a press release issued by the Foreign Office spokesperson on Thursday said.

The ministry conveyed serious concern that Fitna Al Khwarij / TTP, whose entire leadership is based in Afghanistan, operates with impunity from Afghan soil.

It was emphasised that Pakistan has repeatedly received assurances from the Afghan Taliban regime, but, regrettably, with no visible or concrete actions.

The Afghan Taliban regime has been told to take immediate, concrete and verifiable measures against all terror groups operating from its territory, including their leadership, the FO spokesperson added.

16 killed in Karachi building collapse after gas explosion

Bureau Report

KARACHI: At least 16 people were killed and more than 14 others injured after a gas cylinder explosion ripped through a residential building in the Soldier Bazaar's Gul Rana Colony area of Karachi on Thursday.

The intensity of the blast caused the roof of the building to collapse, trapping several residents under the debris.

Rescue officials said the affected structure was a three-storey building with one room on each floor.

A large portion of the building was reduced to rubble, complicating relief efforts.

Authorities said narrow streets in the locality were making it difficult to move heavy machinery to the site.

However, rescue teams continued operations without interruption.

According to rescue sources, 10 bodies — including a woman and a 10-year-old girl identified as Nazia — have been recovered from the debris so far.

More than 14 injured individuals were shifted to nearby hospitals for medical treatment.

Rescue workers also managed to pull another young girl alive from the rubble and provided her with urgent medical care.

Speaking to the media, Rescue 1122 Director General Brigadier Wajid said that initial information suggested the explosion occurred on the first floor of the building.

He said the blast was likely caused by a gas cylinder or a gas suction machine; however, an investigation is going on to determine the exact reason.

Brigadier Wajid said there are fears that more residents could still be trapped beneath the rubble, as rescue teams race against time to locate survivors.

Pakistan Secures Seat at Diplomatic High Table with Board of Peace Entry, Vows Palestine Support

 Bureau Report

ISLAMABAD: Ambassador Masood Khan, former President of Azad Jammu and Kashmir and former Ambassador of Pakistan to the United States and the United Nations, has described Pakistan's participation in the newly convened Board of Peace as a significant diplomatic breakthrough, stating that it provides Islamabad its first opportunity at this scale to sit at the "diplomatic high table" and influence critical decisions concerning Gaza and the broader Middle East.

In a televised interview, Ambassador Khan underscored that Pakistan brings to the Board a proven record of advocating peaceful settlement of disputes, whether on Kashmir, Palestine, or other international conflicts. He emphasized that Pakistan is not a bystander but a stakeholder, having consistently lobbied—alongside a group of Muslim countries—for an immediate ceasefire and an end to what he termed the ongoing humanitarian catastrophe and genocide in Gaza.

Referring to recent developments, he noted that ceasefire violations continue, with 600 Gazans reportedly killed since the ceasefire came into effect, alongside controversial decisions regarding annexation of the West Bank and the expansion of illegal settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories. He stressed that the credibility of the Board of Peace would depend on its ability to halt hostilities, end the humanitarian blockade, restore full humanitarian access, and ensure Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories.

Indian National's Plea Confirms State-Sponsored Assassination Plot

Nikhil Gupta's guilty plea in a US federal court has laid bare India's blatant act of transnational state-sponsored terrorism, and its utter disregard for international law, national sovereignty and global security.

The 54-year-old Indian national confessed to plotting the murder of American citizen Gurbatwant Singh Pannun under the direction of an Indian government employee—a crime that joins a string of similar nefarious acts orchestrated by New Delhi.

This case is by no means an isolated incident. Months before Gupta's arrest, Sikh activist Hardeep Singh Nijjar was gunned down in Canada, with credible allegations linking the killing to agents of the Indian government.

India dismissed the accusation as absurd, yet Gupta's guilty plea has corroborated Canada's claims, exposing a disturbing pattern: India's use of assassination to silence dissent across international borders.

These views were expressed by Prof Cheng Xizhong, Senior Research Fellow at the Charhar Institute, a non-governmental Chinese think-tank on diplomacy and international studies based in Beijing.

He said that, worse still, India's rogue behavior extends far beyond targeted killings. It has secretly funded and armed terrorist groups in neighboring regions such as Pakistan's Balochistan, inciting separatist violence and eroding regional stability. While posturing as a champion of anti-terrorism, India has itself become a perpetrator of terrorism, exploiting state power to carry out brazen transnational crimes.

Such acts constitute not only a direct assault on the sovereignty of the United States, Canada and Pakistan but also a grave threat to the global and regional security order. They trample on the fundamental principles of international law and set a dangerous precedent for state-sponsored violence, he added.

Prof Cheng opined that as a country that purports to be a responsible global actor, India must abandon its hegemonic and terrorist tactics, hold accountable those behind these heinous plots, and respect the sovereignty and laws of other nations. The international community, for its part, should remain vigilant, urge India to mend its ways, and collectively safeguard global and regional security and stability.

A Changing Global Order

For decades, the United States has exercised unmatched global influence. From military interventions in Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya, and Syria to sanctions regimes and regime-change rhetoric elsewhere, Washington has often justified its actions as necessary to defend democracy, human rights, or international security. Yet power, when exercised without consensus or legitimacy, invites resistance. The recent tensions surrounding Greenland, Europe's diplomatic pushback, and disagreements over Venezuela and Iran reveal a deeper transformation underway in the international system—one where even long-standing allies are increasingly unwilling to accept unilateral dictates.

The controversy over Greenland became symbolic of this shift. When suggestions emerged from Washington that the United States had strategic interest in acquiring Greenland—a semi-autonomous territory of Denmark—the reaction from Europe was swift and unified. Denmark rejected the notion outright, and European leaders closed ranks in defense of territorial sovereignty. The message was clear: Europe would not tolerate transactional geopolitics that treated sovereign territories as negotiable assets. What might once have been dismissed as rhetorical bravado instead triggered serious diplomatic backlash, reinforcing Europe's commitment to sovereignty and collective unity.

Iran represents perhaps the most volatile example of this dynamic. U. S. naval deployments in the Persian Gulf, sanctions related to Iran's nuclear program, and rhetoric surrounding regime behavior have heightened tensions. European states, while critical of certain Iranian policies, have often favored diplomatic engagement and adherence to negotiated frameworks such as the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA). The divergence illustrates a growing reluctance among U. S. allies to endorse military escalation without clear multilateral backing.

Meanwhile, global power distribution is shifting. China's Belt and Road Initiative has expanded infrastructure and trade partnerships across Asia, Africa, and parts of Europe. More than 140 countries have engaged in some form of cooperation under this framework. For many developing nations, China's model—emphasizing economic investment without overt political conditions—offers an alternative to Western engagement strategies. Whether one views this approach as pragmatic partnership or strategic influence expansion, its appeal signals dissatisfaction with older interventionist models.

Canada, too, has demonstrated quiet but meaningful recalibration. In response to trade pressures and tariff disputes, Ottawa diversified its trade relationships, signing agreements beyond the United States and strengthening ties with Asia and Europe. This was not confrontation, but adaptation—evidence that even close allies hedge against unpredictability.

At the heart of these developments lies a philosophical tension about power: The principle that "power corrupts" is often invoked, but power can also isolate when it disregards consensus. In a globalized world, economic interdependence, multilateral institutions, and diplomatic networks limit unilateral action. Aircraft carriers and sanctions regimes remain formidable tools, yet legitimacy increasingly derives from coalition-building rather than coercion.

This brings us to the role of the United Nations. Critics frequently describe the UN as toothless or ineffective. Yet the UN's authority depends entirely on the willingness of its member states—especially permanent Security Council members—to abide by collective decisions. When powerful states exercise vetoes to block resolutions or bypass UN authorization for major actions, institutional credibility erodes. Reform debates persist, but strengthening the UN requires political will from its most influential members.

The larger lesson emerging from Europe's assertiveness and UN authorization for major actions, institutional credibility erodes. Reform debates persist, but strengthening the UN requires political will from its most influential members.

broader global reactions is not the decline of American power, but the recalibration of global expectations. Allies are no longer passive recipients of U. S. leadership; they are stakeholders demanding consultation and respect. Sovereignty, multilateralism, and rule-based order remain guiding principles for much of the international community. When any nation—however powerful—appears to deviate from these norms, resistance grows.

There is also a practical dimension. Military intervention in complex societies has historically produced unintended consequences, including instability and migration flows that affect neighboring regions. European reluctance to engage in new conflicts reflects lived experience from past interventions. Diplomacy, sanctions calibrated within international law, and negotiated agreements may lack dramatic visibility, but they offer more sustainable outcomes than unilateral force.

The evolving geopolitical landscape suggests a transition toward multipolarity. The United States remains a superpower with unmatched military and economic capabilities. Europe is consolidating political cohesion. China continues to expand its economic footprint. Regional actors assert greater independence. In such a system, responsible leadership requires restraint, coalition-building, and respect for sovereignty.

Power, in its most constructive form, means capacity to stabilize rather than destabilize; to convene rather than coerce; to strengthen institutions rather than circumvent them. History demonstrates that even dominant powers benefit from alliances grounded in mutual respect. The pushback witnessed from Europe over Greenland and other policy disputes may, in fact, serve as a corrective—reminding all nations that diplomacy anchored in international law carries greater legitimacy than unilateral declarations.

Ultimately, the question is not whether the United States possesses power. It undeniably does. The question is how that power is exercised. In an interconnected world facing shared challenges—from climate change to economic inequality to nuclear proliferation—cooperative frameworks are not signs of weakness but instruments of durability. Strengthening multilateral institutions, respecting sovereignty, and engaging adversaries through dialogue may not yield immediate victories, but they preserve long-term stability.

The future international order will not be shaped by dominance alone. It will be shaped by responsibility. And in that responsibility lies the true measure of leadership.

CDF Marks Kashmir Solidarity Day with Renewed Commitment

Pakistan's commitment to the Kashmiri people is deeply embedded in its political, ideological, and moral foundations, dating back to Partition and remaining central to its national identity. Kashmir is regarded not as a narrow territorial dispute but as a principled struggle grounded in international law, United Nations resolutions, shared history, self-determination, and concerns over human rights violations. This unresolved issue lies at the core of Pakistan-India relations, having driven wars, repeated military crises, and long-term regional instability, while continuing to shape Pakistan's foreign policy priorities, security outlook, and the broader prospects for peace and development in South Asia. The depth of this commitment is reflected in decades of sacrifice by the state, its armed forces, and its people, rooted in a sense of shared destiny, religious and cultural kinship, and a belief in justice that goes beyond strategic calculation.

Expressing a confidence that was both philosophical and strategic, he prognosticated that the dawn of freedom for Kashmir is an inevitable historical outcome, a belief anchored in the justice of the cause, the resilience of the people, and the unflagging support of the Pakistani state, a belief shared collectively by the country's elected leadership, its military institution, and its vast populace who see in Kashmir's future the completion of a journey begun in 1947.

Furthermore, during his comprehensive tour, the Army Chief undertook a thorough review of the operational preparedness and morale of the troops stationed in a state of constant vigilance along one of the world's most militarized and volatile frontiers, the Line of Control, commending in the highest terms their exceptional standards of professionalism, their unwavering discipline, and their steadfast readiness to respond to any contingency despite the daily challenges of terrain, weather, and the persistent threat of unprovoked firing and infiltration attempts from the opposite side. He noted, with the insight of a seasoned commander, that the troops perform their duty under conditions of extreme duress and latent hostility, yet maintain a level of morale and operational efficiency that stands as a bulwark of national defense and a symbol of reassurance to the Kashmiri people on the Pakistani side of the divide. He underscored the critical imperative of maintaining this peak state of readiness, emphasizing that vigilance, technological adaptation, and seamless inter-service coordination are not optional but essential components of a credible deterrent posture, necessary to safeguard national sovereignty and contribute to regional stability by preventing any adventurism from escalating into a wider conflict.

In his culminating remarks, Field Marshal Munir returned to the central theme of indivisible solidarity, issuing a final, resonant reaffirmation of Pakistan's complete and unqualified unity with the Kashmiri people, declaring in terms that were both a promise and a prophecy that this support is a permanent feature of the national landscape, immutable and non-negotiable, and will remain so until the final curtain falls on the tragedy of occupation and the Kashmiri people are able to exercise their sovereign choice in an atmosphere of freedom and without coercion. This articulation, carrying the full weight of the military establishment's commitment, was received not as a standalone statement but as the latest and most powerful iteration of a consistent national chorus, a voice that Kashmiris have come to recognize as their most reliable and potent amplifier on a global stage often marked by indifference or strategic calculation. The sincerity embedded in this prolonged and costly commitment, demonstrated through decades of diplomatic effort, humanitarian support, and military sacrifice, has forged a trust and a bond that is perhaps Pakistan's most significant strategic asset in relation to the dispute, winning the heartfelt allegiance of Kashmiris who see in Pakistan not just a supporter, but a custodian of their hopes and a co-sharer in their destiny.

Thus, this enduring and repeatedly reaffirmed stance continues to fortify the conviction among all stakeholders in Pakistan and within the Kashmiri resistance that the trajectory of history, though arduous and painful, bends toward justice. The continued oppression, rather than extinguishing the flame of freedom, has only oxygenized the movement and validated the moral and legal foundations of the struggle. With an abiding faith that is rooted in both principle and a perception of historical inevitability, Pakistan persists in its stance, shoulder to shoulder with the Kashmiri people, operating on the firm belief that the day will arrive when the chains of occupation are shattered, when justice descends upon the verdant valleys of Kashmir, and when the flag of self-determination flies over Srinagar, marking not merely a political victory but the triumphant validation of a struggle for identity, dignity, and the fundamental right to chart one's own destiny—a destiny that, in the hearts and aspirations of countless Kashmiris, remains inextricably and finally linked to their ultimate accession to Pakistan.

A Ramazan Neghaban Bachat Festival for Public Relief

Punjab's evolving social protection architecture offers a timely case study in how subnational governments in emerging economies can modernize welfare delivery through institutional reform, digital targeting, and market-compatible interventions. The Ramazan Neghaban Bachat Festival represents a flagship initiative within this reform trajectory — demonstrating how fiscal resources can be translated into high-impact citizen services through structured execution and governance innovation.

Implemented in Lahore's Jilani Park over three days, the festival served more than 300,000 citizens through a regulated affordability marketplace comprising over 150 vendors. Essential food items and household goods were offered at discounts reaching 20 percent, generating average household savings estimated between Rs2,000 and Rs3,500 per visit. Operational performance metrics reflected strong administrative capacity, with pricing compliance rates exceeding 95 percent and uninterrupted supply flows across peak demand periods.

Under Chief Minister Maryam Nawaz's leadership, Punjab's welfare reforms increasingly emphasize system-building over episodic relief. Digital beneficiary registries, decentralized service hubs, public-private collaboration, and outcome tracking represent structural upgrades aligned with international governance modernization frameworks.

For development policymakers, the Ramazan Neghaban Bachat Festival offers a replicable model of shock-responsive social protection embedded within routine administrative systems. Its success demonstrates how subnational governments can operationalize targeted fiscal support while preserving market functionality and strengthening institutional credibility.

Looking forward, plans to institutionalize similar platforms during Eid and other peak consumption periods suggest the emergence of a permanent seasonal stabilization mechanism within Punjab's welfare architecture.

Such adaptive instruments are particularly relevant for low- and middle-income economies facing recurring price volatility and consumption surges tied to cultural calendars.

Beyond immediate affordability gains, the initiative advanced broader governance objectives: enhanced service delivery capacity, strengthened public trust, improved data utilization, and deeper economic inclusion. These outcomes align with Sustainable Development Goal priorities related to poverty reduction, institutional effectiveness, and inclusive growth.

In development terms, Punjab's Ramazan Neghaban Bachat Festival illustrates how reform-oriented leadership can transform welfare expenditure into high-performance social protection systems. Through precision targeting, operational discipline, and citizen-centered design, the province has demonstrated a pathway toward modern, accountable, and scalable public service delivery.

For international observers, the initiative underscores an essential lesson: effective social protection is not solely about budget size, but about institutional design, governance quality, and execution capacity. Punjab's experience offers a compelling example of how emerging economies can strengthen resilience, inclusion, and state legitimacy through smart welfare reform.

52 Million Textbook Sets Published in Sindh, Formal Distribution Launched

Abdul Ghafoor Sarohi

KARACHI: The Sindh Textbook Board has successfully achieved its publication target by preparing 52 million textbook sets for the academic year 2026–27. Sindh’s Provincial Minister for Education, Syed Sardar Ali Shah, while formally inaugurating the distribution process, stated that every student will have new textbooks in hand on the first day of the new academic year. He added that textbooks will be further improved in consultation with teachers and education experts to reduce the academic burden on children and to promote quality education.

The inauguration ceremony, organized by the Sindh Textbook Board, was held at Government Girls Lower Secondary School, Neelam Colony, Clifton, Karachi, where the Provincial Education Minister attended as Chief Guest. The event was also attended by Secretary School Education Zahid Ali Abbasi, Special Secretary Education Abdul Hanan Sheikh, Chairman Sindh Textbook Board Parvez Ahmed Baloch, Managing Director Sindh Education Foundation Ghanwar Laghari, Secretary STBB Dr. Nusrat Parveen Sehato, Board Members Professor Syed Zawaar Naqvi, Agha Rafiq, Dr. Adal Soomro and Dr. Ishaq Samijo, along with education officers, teachers, and a large number of students.

For the academic year 2026–27, the Sindh Textbook Board has completed the publication of textbooks from Early Childhood Education classes up to Grade 10 under the title “Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto Textbook Series,” with a total of 195 titles printed up to Grade 10. The textbooks have been published in Sindhi, Urdu, and English.

Praising the timely publication of textbooks, the Provincial Education Minister commended the performance of the Sindh Textbook Board, stating that the institution has demonstrated responsibility and commitment. He noted that despite an increase in paper taxes and other challenges, the Board successfully completed the publication process through effective planning, ensuring timely availability of textbooks for students.

The Provincial Minister recalled that during the previous federal government, emphasis was placed on the implementation of a Single National Curriculum, which Sindh opposed clearly and unequivocally. Today, the correctness of Sindh’s stance is being validated, as other provinces are now also discussing the inclusion of mother tongues as subjects in schools—an approach Sindh adopted long ago.

He emphasized that the Constitution guarantees free education; therefore, providing free textbooks to children is also the government’s responsibility. He informed that the formal distribution of textbooks has commenced today and will be completed by April 1, while District Education Officers (DEOs) have been directed to ensure timely delivery of books to schools.

On this occasion, Secretary School Education Sindh Zahid Ali Abbasi stated that UNESCO has declared Sindh’s curriculum as “most inclusive.” He added that efforts are underway to develop the curriculum according to a “learning-to-earning” mechanism so that students can be equipped with market-relevant skills.

Chairman Sindh Textbook Board Parvez Ahmed Baloch said that online availability of textbooks is also being ensured. He added that the STBB has successfully achieved all its targets over the past two years and will continue this performance in the future.

Later, the Provincial Education Minister Syed Sardar Ali Shah distributed textbooks among the students of the school and encouraged them through interaction.

The Bank announced a cash dividend of PKR 1.25 per share (12.5%), bringing the total payout for the year to PKR 2.75 per share (27.5%).

The Bank’s non-funded income surged by 107% year-on-year, demonstrating strong diversification of revenue streams. Total income declined by 11% due to declining policy rates and compressed spreads; however, the contraction remained moderate relative to broader industry trends.

In 2025, BankIslami expanded its deposit base by over PKR 100 billion for the second time in a decade, closing the year at PKR 660 billion. This represents 18% year-on-year growth, mainly driven by a robust 35.2% increase in current accounts, elevating the CASA ratio to a record 71%.

During the year, BankIslami made several strategic investments to support its long-term expansion, including strengthening its digital infrastructure, expanding its branch network, and acquiring a 32-storey tower in Karachi, which is set to serve as the Bank’s new headquarters. These investments contributed to a 42% increase in operating expenses.

Prudent capital management remained a cornerstone of performance, with the Capital Adequacy Ratio (CAR) standing at a solid 16.6%, comfortably above the regulatory requirement. The Asset-to-Deposit Ratio stood at 48.8%, reflecting disciplined balance sheet deployment.

Asset quality continued to improve, with delinquent financing declining by 9.4% to PKR 21.9 billion, resulting in a reduction in the infection ratio from 7.4% to 6.8%.

The highlight of the year was being named Pakistan’s Best Islamic Bank at the Euromoney Islamic Finance Awards, along with several other accolades that further strengthened the Bank’s achievements and brand equity.

Commenting on BankIslami’s performance, President & CEO, Rizwan Ata, said, “2025 was a year of learning and opportunity. While the industry faced headwinds, it reinforced the importance of disciplined diversification across risks and investments.”

“As we step into 2026, our focus is to become stronger and more stable and continue contributing to the evolution of the broader industry. We remain committed to our purpose of Saving Humanity from Riba and to advancing Islamic banking as the first choice for customers across Pakistan,” he added.

BankIslami is currently operating over 560 branches across Pakistan and delivering a diverse range of Shariah-compliant banking products to its
